Council approves Neary as director of Public Works

By Robin Jordan

Butte-Silver Bow commissioners voted last week to approve Chief Executive Dave Palmer's recommendation to make Mark Neary the permanent Director of Public Works and Palmer's plan to reorganize the department, creating a separate division for engineering.

During a public comment period prior to commissioners' discussion of the matter, several people spoke in favor of Neary's appointment, including public works employees and one private contractor, saying department morale had greatly improved since he was named interim director and that he was qualified to head the department, even though he is not an engineer.

According to Palmer, Neary worked in road construction for local contractors for years and was a construction equipment operator for the county before being named interim public works director in June.

Public works is the largest department in Butte-Silver Bow, with an annual budget of about $30 million, and its director oversees 126 employees and directs several divisions, including roads, water, sewer, landfill, transit and central equipment and maintenance.

The department has been without a permanent director since last May, when Dave Schultz, who is a professional engineer, resigned to pursue private consulting work.

The county's job description posted in July for the position required applicants have a Bachelor's Degree in Civil Engineering or Public Works Administration, be registered as a Professional Engineer with the State of Montana or be able to obtain registration within a year, have extensive public works administration experience, including at least 5 years of management experience, preferably with a city-county government or "any equivalent combination of experience and training which provides the knowledge, skills and abilities required to perform the work."

Several commissioners said previously that the next public works director should be a professional engineer. A search was conducted and the hiring committee narrowed the list of candidates to five, all engineers. Three were from Butte, one from Idaho and one from Wyoming.

The candidate from Idaho, a city engineer, was offered the job, but backed out in August. Soon afterward, Palmer said rather than reopen the job search, he might propose creating an engineering division in public works that would include engineers and engineering techs, who hold associate engineering degrees, to oversee engineering duties for the county. As part of that plan, he said, Neary would be public works director and oversee other department duties and projects.

Currently, though, the county has no certified professional engineer to serve in the newly-created engineering division, though. Matt Moore, operations manager of the Metro Division and the county's only public works employee with professional engineering certification, resigned Wednesday, Nov. 7 to take a private sector job.

According to Palmer's organizational chart, the engineering division will consist of Brian Wilkins, who oversees the county's water system and is an engineering intern who could become a professional engineer by taking the state examination, and two other employees who have associate degrees in engineering. The chart indicates that the engineering department head position is vacant.

At last week's council meeting, Parks and Recreation Director J.P. Gallagher was one of those who spoke on Neary's behalf, saying morale among public works employees had improved considerably since Neary took over as interim director.

Contractor Jay Fortune, whose company frequent works on projects for Butte-Silver Bow, said Neary is qualified for the job. He said Neary understands construction and knows how to save money during construction.

Commissioner Jim Fisher made the motion to approve Neary's appointment. He said as chair of the council's Public Works Committee, he had worked closely with Neary in the transition period and thought Neary had done an excellent job, citing paving work on Dewey Boulevard and other road projects.

Commissioner John Sorich said the decision

This is kind of a dangerous stance for a guy of Irish descent.

It is going to get me disowned by several family members, and I probably won't be allowed into my dad's house for Christmas or any other holiday.

But I am cheering against Notre Dame Saturday when the No. 3 Irish play No. 12 Syracuse at Yankee Stadium.

For one thing, I make it a policy to never cheer for the home team in Yankee Stadium, and the Irish will be wearing their home jerseys.

Also, even as a guy who was forced into being a lifelong Notre Dame fan, I have a really hard time cheering for Irish coach Brian Kelly, who hates old people, children and dogs.

Even more, Mike Lynch coaches for Syracuse.

Every football fan from Mon-

BUTTE SPORTS

I'll be cheering for Torpedo and the Syracuse Orange tana – or at least Montana Grizzly fans – should be cheering for the guy they call "Torpedo."

I'm a little partial to Lynch because I wrote a feature story about him for The Montana Kaimin, the University of Montana student paper, when he was the back up to the third-string center. I also drank several hundred beers with Mike as we solved the world's problems – but forgot the solutions by morning – during the offseason.

Mike is the offensive coordinator and running backs coach for Syracuse, and he has the team's offense humming.

Last week, the Orange rolled Louisville for a 54-23 Senior Night victory at the Carrier Dome.

That, as you know by now, led to the firing of Louisville head coach Bobby Petrino, son of legendary Butte coach Bob "Putter" Petrino.

The younger Petrino's second tenure at Louisville did not work out so well, but do not worry for the coach who was born in Butte but raised in Helena. The school still owes him around $14 million in a buyout.

He will be just fine.

Lynch also has some ties to the Mining City, and they go well beyond his love for coming to town for St. Patrick's Day.

While he has coached under head coach Dino Barbers at Eastern Illinois, Bowling Green and Syracuse, Mike is originally from the Mick Dennehy coaching tree.

Lynch won over the hard-nosed Butte native when he was earning his nickname as a scout-team player for the Grizzlies a couple of decades ago. Mick liked what he saw in the undersized kid from Roseville, California, because he played every snap at practice like it was the Super Bowl.

He really did that, too. If you asked the first-string defensive linemen from back then, they would tell you Torpedo never took a snap off. They would tell you his heart was the biggest part of his body.

Even though Mike knew there was little chance of him taking a meaningful snap for the Grizzlies, he gave everything he had and sacrificed his body every day at practice to help make the Grizzlies better.

Torpedo was "Rudy" of the University of Montana, only Mike's story was not fabricated for Hollywood like Dan Ruettinger's was at Notre Dame.

Maybe it will someday because Mike's life story really is an inspirational one. From the minute I met Mike at a party at Butte native Mike Orizotti's house in Missoula (at least half of Mike's friends were Butte guys), I knew Mike had a passion for football like none I have ever seen before.

He didn't just like football. He loved it.

He didn't just love football. He lived it.

Ever since he was a ball boy at San Francisco 49ers training camps as a young kid, Mike knew his future was football. You better believe he will be a head coach of a major college football team someday, too.

It will probably be someday really soon.

Mike's coaching career started with the Grizzlies as the tight ends coach in 1999. The next year, he joined Dennehy at Utah State. He went to Eastern Illinois, in 2005. There, he eventually ended up with Barbers, who elevated Mike to offensive coordinator and running backs coach before this season.

He was the co-offensive coordinator and offensive line coach during his first two years at Syracuse, and he helped lead the Orange to two of the top three total offensive seasons in team history.

His 2016 team gained 5,290 yards. Last year, it picked up 5,476. So far this year, Lynch's offense has racked up 4,822 yards. It is averaging 44.4 points per game.

Syracuse went 4-8 the year before Mike and Barber's staff took over. This year, after two more 4-8 seasons, the Orange are 8-2 and winners of four straight.

Torpedo's offense averaged 47 points per game in wins over North Carolina, North Carolina State, Wake Forest and Louisville.

On Sunday, the Orange received the No. 12 ranking from The Associated Press and USA Today coaches poll. That is the highest ranking for Syracuse since Donovan McNabb and the Orange were ranked No. 11 in September of 1998.

A couple of years ago, I wrote about how Mike used to dream of running through the tunnel and onto the field at Washington-Grizzly Stadium in Missoula.

His eyes lit up like Mike Singletary on third and 1 and his body would literally shake as he talked about why he worked so hard for the Grizzlies, even though he knew he had no chance of ever being a star for the Grizzlies.

That was back when the Missoula stadium held about 19,000 fans.

On Saturday, Mike is going to lead his team onto the field at Yankee Stadium in front of about 54,000 screaming fans.

Sure, that's a much smaller crowd than when the Orange played Syracuse Notre Dame at MetLife Stadium in 2016. But this is Yankee Stadium, and ESPN called the game "the most significant college football game at Yankee Stadium maybe since the 1940s."

Even though the big stadium in the Bronx is the new Yankee Stadium that opened in 2009, this is a really big deal for a former Grizzly practice player.

It is a pretty damn big deal for the guys he used to drink beers with back in Missoula, too.

So, my ancestors are going to have to forgive me for this one.

Let's go Torpedo. Let's go Orange.

Beat the Irish.

Carousel Corner

Winter has set its grip and everyone, except the most dedicated hunters, is hoping for a little more of the nice weather. I have heard several people bragging that it will be in the 40's this week. Only in Butte would you hear someone happy to see weather in the 40's. With the time change and the cooler temperatures it seems people have started staying in evenings, so accordingly the Carousel will begin to close just a bit earlier at 6 pm. If you have a party booked or would like to have one later in the evening, we will definitely accommodate your request.

I did get a new computer, faster, smaller, cooler, but it still has the same outdated operating system. Me.

Construction is still moving along in the park although at a slower pace. The crew from White Concrete installed our new front walk on Halloween. Tony from Blacklock Blocks has finished installing the brick pavers that form the ice-skating ribbon. He has now moved on to the decorative pavers in what will be the Midway, a hard-scape plaza with an open pavilion that will fill the area between the Carousel building, the swimming pool and the tennis court. Tony is from Scotland and a true pleasure to talk to. Halloween night he was working in the dark with a head lamp on.

We are looking to fill a few open spots on the carousel board of directors. We would especially like to find some folks with a little professional experience such as bankers, lawyers, or accountants. We have a good mix now but it would be nice to find some new blood with fresh ideas.

Don't forget that our third annual gala is coming up in January. Michelle Brennick at 490-8207 is the person to contact if you would like to donate prizes or buy tickets. This year's theme will be the Columbia Gardens. We will only be selling 350 tickets in an effort to reduce the overcrowding of the past couple of years. The gala is the primary fundraiser for the Carousel, so we hope you will attend. If you would like to donate to the carousel or send a memorial our mailing address is PO Box 4133, Butte, MT 59702. MAKING SENSE OF INVESTING

Debbie McLarnon

Time to Think About Year-End Investment Moves

We've still got a couple of months left in 2018, but it's not too soon to start thinking about some year-end investment moves that might benefit you. Here are a few possibilities (although not all will apply to your situation):

Add to your IRA. For the 2018 tax year, you can put up to $5,500 into your traditional or Roth IRA (assuming you are eligible), or $6,500 if you're 50 or older. If you haven't reached this limit, consider adding some money. You have until April 15, 2019, to contribute to your IRA for 2018, but why wait until the last minute?

Increase your 401(k) contributions. You already may be investing in your 401(k) or similar employer-sponsored retirement plan, but you might be able to bump up your contributions for the rest of the year, if it's allowed. Of course, you should always put in enough to earn your employer's matching contribution, if one is offered.

Take your RMDs. If you are 70½ or older, you must start taking withdrawals – called required minimum distributions, or RMDs – from your traditional IRA and your 401(k) or similar retirement plan. Generally, you must take these RMDs by December 31 every year. But if you turned 70½ in 2018, you can wait until April 1, 2019, until you take your first RMD. However, you will then have to take a second RMD (the one for age 71) by December 31, 2019. Taking two RMDs in one year could give you an unexpectedly large taxable income for the year, possibly bumping you into a higher tax bracket and affecting the amount of your Social Security benefits subject to taxes. So, if you are considering delaying your first RMD, consult with your tax advisor.

Make changes in response to life events. In 2018, did you experience a major life event, such as a marriage, divorce or addition of a child? Or did you change jobs or retire? Any of these events could lead you to adjust your investment plans, so now may be the time to do so, possibly with the help of a financial professional.

Review your investment mix. At least once a year, it's a good idea to review your investment mix to ensure it's still suitable for your goals and risk tolerance. Sometimes, even without your taking any action, your portfolio might change in ways you hadn't expected. For example, suppose you wanted your portfolio to contain 60% stocks and 40% bonds and other investments. After a period of rising prices, though, the value of your stocks may have increased so much that they now occupy 65% of your portfolio – which means you may be taking on more risk than you had originally intended. Consequently, you may need to rebalance your portfolio to get back to your original 60% to 40% ratios. (Keep in mind that these figures are just for illustration; everyone's ideal portfolio mix will depend on their individual situations.)

These aren't the only year-end moves you may want to consider, but they can help you close out 2018 on a positive note. Plus, they can serve as a reminder that you need to be vigilant as you keep working toward your financial goals.

Council's anti-engineer rhetoric deplorable

By Robin Jordan

Last week, Butte-Silver Bow commissioners approved the appointment of Mark Neary as the county's permanent public works director, ending the months-long debate surrounding finding a new head for that department.

We still think, given the size and scope of the public works department, that a professional engineer should have been hired for the position, but apparently, most of the members of the council of commissioners did not agree with us.

We heard from several county employees that morale has improved considerably in the public works department since Neary took on interim public works director responsibilities. We have no doubts about his knowledge of construction or his personnel management skills. He's well-liked by his coworkers and seems to be working hard to stay involved in the county's projects, so we hope the department will thrive under his leadership.

However, in defending Chief Executive Palmer's choice of Neary for the position, several commissioners felt the need to disparage the role of engineers in county projects and to characterize engineers in general as pencil-pushing geeks with their heads in the clouds and no real-world knowledge of what goes on in the field.

Ironically, at the same meeting, the council heard a presentation by HDR, an engineering firm with offices in Butte, about numerous prestigious awards the firm has won for its work on the Basin Creek Drinking Water Treatment Plant. Thanks to the plant's design and cutting edge technology, Butte now enjoys some of the cleanest drinking water in the United States, something Palmer and other officials have touted as a matter of community pride.

Another bragging point for county officials is Montana Tech, which is known world-wide for the quality of its engineering graduates.

We hope some of the college's alumni, students, professors and administrators will take note of some of the anti-engineer rhetoric expressed by commissioners last week.

We've heard the anti-intellectual line of reasoning before, the notion that somehow there's an innate nobility of toil in the field that supersedes book-learning and technology. Our former editor, Rick Foote, was fond of recalling the amazing accomplishments of a past public works director, who according to legend, could pave huge swaths of Butte with nothing but his loyal crew, a twinkle in his eye and some magic spit that repelled potholes.

We're still skeptical.

It was obvious last year that Palmer wanted to hire a construction supervisor to oversee county projects. He proposed it in his budget and the council of commissioners rejected it.

Now, he's got a public works head who's got all the qualifications of a construction supervisor and the council has gone along with the idea of creating a separate engineering division within the public works department.

Unfortunately, the county now has no professional engineer to work in that division. Its only professional engineer, Matt Moore, resigned last Wednesday, the same day as the meeting, to take a job in the private sector.

We've heard Palmer hopes to hire a professional engineer to head the engineering division, but we wonder how successful a search will be, considering the difficulties the county had in recruiting a P.E. for the public works director job, which would have been more prestigious.

Maybe the county should add, "Must possess magic spit" to its requirements for the new head of engineering.

Polling and Opinion Shapers in 2018

By George Waring

The last weekend surveys before the Midterm elections indicated that Democrats enjoyed an eight point advantage nationally over Republicans based on the average of ten major national polls. That is, if all those surveyed actually voted. That was Nate Silver's final report on fivethirtyeight.com's Congressional site.

Silver gave Democrats an 86% chance to gain control of the House. Democrats could gain as many as 38 seats. Silver wrote that all ten polls would have to suffer a systemic error before the Democrats could win control of the Senate.

For Kathleen Williams to have won, the Democrats would have had to have won 54 seats. And the odds were that the outside limit on Democrats was going to be 50 seats. She was down by 4 points in the last polling.

Silver reported that Trump was posting some of his best job approval numbers ever. He had risen to 43.1 percent, according to the FiveThirtyEight average, the highest since March 2017. Trump's disapproval rating remained at 52. It seemed that Trump's string of rallies were making him less unpopular.

However, Trump still had the fourth-worst approval rating for a midterm president since World War II, better only than Harry Truman in 1946, George W. Bush in 2006 and Barack Obama in 2014.

As Trump's numbers went up, Republican House candidate numbers were going down. They were at or near their all-time lows. According to Silver, Republican chances of retaining control of the House had dropped to 14 percent --about 1 chance in 7.

John Tester finished up with polls showing him 8 points ahead of Rosendale. That gave him an 87% chance to win.

The Republican Party did not fare well on the Opinion pages of our national press. Fareed Zakaria concluded a review of a Republican Party that "had become a vast repository of conspiracy theories, fake news, false accusations and paranoid fantasies." Acknowledging that the GOP "has many good people and good ideas," Zakaria wrote, "But none of them matters while it houses and feeds fantasies, conspiracies and paranoia, tinged with racism, bigotry and anti-Semitism. Republicans are now squarely the party of McCarthy, and until that cancer is excised, they should not be entrusted with power."

Conservative Max Boot, formerly of the Wall Street Journal, counseled readers:

"If you're sick and tired, here is what you can do. Vote for Democrats on Tuesday. For every office. Regardless of who they are. And I say that as a former Republican. Some Republicans in suburban districts may claim they aren't for Trump. Don't believe them. Whatever their private qualms, no Republicans have consistently held Trump to account. They are too scared that doing so will hurt their chances of reelection. If you're as sick and tired as I am of being sick and tired about what's going on, vote against all Republicans. Every single one. That's the only message they will understand."

Jennifer Rubin, a conservative, maintained that this election was "about the soul of the country. In the final days of the campaign, Trump (on the caravan) and Republicans (on protecting preexisting conditions) have simply lied. The caravan is not a threat, is nowhere near the border and does not contain Middle Eastern terrorists. Republicans repeatedly voted to repeal Obamacare, including its protection for preexisting conditions, with no reasonable substitute; they currently are pursuing litigation that would invalidate Obamacare's protection for preexisting conditions. These pronouncements are not spin or exaggeration; they are lies. The voters should decide if our politics now refuses to distinguish fact from fiction, truth from falsehood."

Finally, this came from the Washington Post's conservative Christian Evangelical, Michael Gerson:

"In a democracy, a vote is usually not a matter of good and evil. It is a matter of weighing competing goods and choosing lesser evils. The possible outcomes this November come down to this: Trump contained, or Trump was a hard one for council members to make.

"Not to take anything away from Mr. Neary, but he does not have an engineering degree? Is that a requirement?" he asked.

Palmer said Neary had shown that he was an excellent leader of personnel. He said under his plan for an engineering division, the public works director did not need an engineering degree.

"If I felt that we needed a P.E. for this position, I wouldn't have made this recommendation," he said.

Fisher said the county needs a director who's "hands on," a quality he said that was missing in the previous director.

"Engineers—we all need them for certain things... There's a lot of guys that are engineers that never worked in the field, never got their hands dirty... You can do a lot of things on paper and in an office, but until you're out there in the field, seeing what takes place, it's hard to say," Fisher said.

Fisher said he could name two or three projects that had been completed since Neary took over the interim position that had previously been held up in the engineering phase.

"They're up there drawing blueprints and finding out where to run pipe and where they would put drains. Maybe Mark's not an engineer, but he went out there, he looked at the project, he put a drain in a certain area and some other things," Fisher said.

Dan Strizic, interim commissioner for District 2, said Neary will be in charge of an engineering division and understands what is required of engineers, so he "doesn't need to be there with a P.E. behind his name" to supervise the department.

"He can get the job done and he realizes that. To me, that's the kind of working person we need in this public works division, so I think that concern is minimized," Strizic said.

The council approved Neary's appointment by a vote of 10-2. Council Chairman John Morgan and Sorich cast the two nay votes.

triumphant. "Democrats, I suspect, will make a victory harder than it should be. A significant number seem to view Trump's vulnerability as an opportunity to ideologically purify their party. They are actively undermining the job of containing the president by alienating centrist voters they need to turn the House.

"But this does not change the political and ethical reality. The only way to save the GOP is to defeat it in the House. In this case, a Republican vote for a Democratic representative will be an act of conscience."

Friendly reminder about snow and ice removal

Butte-Silver Bow Municipal Code For Sidewalk Snow Removal

Snow & ice removal - Generally.

It is the duty of the owner or tenant or their agents of any premises within the city and county of Butte-Silver Bow to keep the sidewalks in front of and adjoining his premises clean and safe for pedestrians, and with all possible dispatch to remove snow, ice, slush and other impediments to safe and convenient foot travel, and to prevent continuous accumulation of the same upon such sidewalks. In no case shall the snow, ice, slush, mud or other materials removed from such sidewalks be dumped, placed or deposited on or upon adjacent sidewalks. The snow, ice, slush, mud or other materials may be removed from such sidewalk on to adjoining streets or on to the parkway between nonintegral curb and sidewalk but may not be dumped, placed or deposited in such manner so as to create a hazard to vehicles or pedestrian traffic. Fit for the Holidays

We may have made it through Halloween, but before Thanksgiving arrives and the parties and goodies are non-stop till New Year's, it may be good to have a strategy to avoid the typical holiday weight gain. If we can stick with our exercise program, think how good we will feel when others, without a plan, are dragging themselves out after the holidays to try to get back in shape. We will have a definite advantage!

We know that there will be time challenges, most likely weather challenges, and holiday food will make our workouts even more essential. That is where the planning comes in. One strategy is to have a workout buddy. The two of you can plan where you will fit in your exercise sessions, whether it's walking outdoors or at the mall or going to the gym together. You will have the extra incentive of not letting your workout buddy down.

If you prefer to exercise alone, and you have a dog, make your commitment to your favorite furry friend. Once you have established a routine of walking with your pup, whether it is first thing in the morning or any other time of day, you can count on him or her to remind you when it is time to head outdoors. Promise yourself you'll stick with the schedule.

If you like to downhill ski, cross-country ski, ice skate or snow shoe, make plans well ahead of time. Involving friends and family in your plans will not only make it more fun, it will increase your incentive to get out and enjoy our beautiful winters. The snowy landscapes and beautiful scenery will lift your spirits, which is also important this time of year.

Have some fun! Get out with children, grandchildren, or just on your own, and make a snowman, go sledding, have a snow-ball fight or have fun shoveling the walks with a playful pet. The fun, the good company and the workout will leave you feeling energized and refreshed.

If you work out at a gym, stick with your regular routine, or figure out a schedule that will work with the extra demands of the holidays. Think of value, making sure to utilize your membership just as much in the coming weeks as you do the rest of the year. If you have thought of joining a fitness facility, check for holiday specials and enjoy exploring the indoor offerings while the weather is cold.

If you like to dance, you can make house cleaning more fun by dancing around the house while performing chores, or just putting on some music and letting yourself go. Better yet, take advantage of the dances around town and head out in the evening to try out one of these offerings and polish up your dancing skills. You'll likely have too much fun to think about exercise, but you'll get a workout none the less.

Before relaxing in front of the television, get some exercise by putting in a workout DVD or finding a YouTube fitness video to move to. If you have exercise equipment at home, watch a favorite show while you get your cardio done. Then continue watching your show while you do some strength and flexibility exercises for a cool down. You will feel better and enjoy your down time even more knowing you made the effort to get your heart-rate up.

Being organized in the other areas of holiday preparation, decorating, shopping, baking, etc. will help to relieve stress and in general keep you on track. Being ready for the season and sticking with your plan to stay active will make the whole experience more enjoyable. Figure it all out now while you have time and have a happy, healthy holiday season!

Brain/Gut Connection

Frequently we see customers who need help with mental acuity, from young college students to older senior citizens. Also, in larger numbers, customers complain about digestive disturbances, from irritable bowel, indigestion, acid reflux, and general nausea. Years ago, Dr. Andrew Weil (kind of a forerunner for Dr. Oz), said that if you are having digestive issues, see a therapist/psychologist. He believed, and more of the medical community is agreeing, that the gut and the brain share an important connection.

(This article is based on a publication that came across our desk recently. The information is paraphrased or quoted, and we thought its information was important enough that it should be shared with a wide audience).

In 1998, neurobiologist Michael Gershon published the book "The Second Brain: Your Gut Has a Mind of its Own," discussing the brain-gut axis, which he defined as the "continuous feedback loop between sensory neurons in the gastrointestinal tract and the motor responses generated in the center nervous system." Gershon was one of the first medical professionals to implicate the mind in disorders of the gut and his discoveries led to new research into the "pathophysiology of irritable bowel syndrome and inflammatory bowel disease." Scientists call the nervous system in the gut our "second brain." The "centric nervous system," or ENS, is very similar to the nervous system in the brain and functions independently. This system includes networks of neurons, and messengers such as neurotransmitters and growth factors. Interestingly, every class of neurotransmitter that exists in the brain in our head is also found in the "second brain." In fact, 95 percent of the body's serotonin (the stuff that helps us stay calm, feel upbeat and sleep well) is found in the bowels! It is now believed that antidepressants block the reuptake of serotonin mostly in the digestive system, not in the brain.

Since Michael Gershon did his research, doctors and scientists now know the importance of the gut in immune response and overall health. (Just watch TV and observe the many ads selling probiotics). A term being used frequently in the scientific community is "human microbiota," a collection of microbes that include bacteria and viruses that live in the body, primarily in our gut. Dr. Siri Carpenter published an article in 2012 in which she stated that the human body is mostly bacteria. In fact, "single-celled organisms, mostly bacteria, outnumber our own cells 10 to one, and most of them are in the gut."

Other research has indicated that microbiota are important in healthy brain function, and there is a relationship between stress and microbiota. These findings indicate that bacteria in the gastrointestinal tract, including probiotic and pathogenic bacteria, can affect the central nervous system. Some researchers hope this informa-

Mining Museum Meanderings

By Larry Hoffman

With the Carousel up and running, I'm turning my scribbling to another great cause in Butte, The World Museum of Mining.

For more than fifty years the WMM has worked to preserve the heritage of our mining town, and educate the public about the importance of mining in our modern civilization. It started in the days when the Anaconda Company was a world powerhouse with its roots in Butte, and its spin-off, the Montana Power Company, was another top employer in Butte and Montana.

A group of foresighted men and women got together with the idea of building a museum that would give the public a picture of mining, especially underground mining, a world as unknown to most people as the far side of the moon. The Orphan Girl Mine was provided to the organization as a site with a headframe and engine room, as well as a rich history of its own. The group raised money, got tons of historic relics donated, and put in thousands of hours to build a museum on that base.

Through the years the Museum has had its ups and downs, but has grown into one of the top tourist destinations in southwest Montana, as well as favorite place for Butte folks to bring family and friends. The photo archives repository is a research tool complementing the Butte Archives.

When the mining displays were upgraded about 15 years ago, a new building was planned to provide space for displays, such as the Rocky Mountain Café backbar and gambling fixtures were put in storage. Those plans never materialized. The backbar was eventually loaned to Headframe Distillery for their facility.

About a year ago, the board of directors voted to begin planning for a new entrance building called the Mining Heritage Center. A Helena architectural firm, Mosaic, was hired to provide conceptual designs and planning to get an idea of what it would take to make it happen.

The building would house the administration offices and the photo archives, as well as desperately needed restroom facilities! There would be a welcoming reception area, meeting and education rooms, exhibit displays inside and out, and a dedicated gathering area for the underground mine tours.

The bottom line is it would take about $5,000,000.

That's a lot of money in anyone's mind, but not out of reason for Butte, the "Can-do" city. In addition to the businesses and people here, we have mining family scattered across the Earth, both as descendants of miners and alumni of Montana School of Mines and Montana Tech.

The organization will officially launch the fund-raising campaign with a gala on December 6, National Miners Day, hosted by the Finlen hotel, starting at 7:00 PM. Representatives from Mosaic Architecture will be there with graphics to show what is planned and how it will contribute to the growth and success of our mining museum. There will be good food, drinks, auction items, and entertainment, but most of all we will be gathered with friends and supporters of this Butte institution. Tickets are available from the Museum at 406-723-7211. They are $75 each or $125 for two. Become a WMM member and get them for $60 and $115, plus discounted museum admission and underground tours.

Come and have some fun to help the World Museum of Mining grow and improve!

What's Cooking

Special Dinner Sides

By Debbie Sorensen

It's downright hard to believe that the holiday season is quickly coming up. I've been planning for company this weekend as well as looking forward to recipes that I can work into meal plans for special occasions in the very near future.

Potatoes are usually a staple on our menu, so I have enjoyed finding some additional recipes to bring some interest to the table. These potatoes can also be refrigerated until time to bake them. Increase baking time to 1 hour.

The vinaigrette recipe, made from scratch, is not only delicious, but much appreciated because it has only a few basic ingredients and no preservatives. Both of these recipes come from the "2003 Taste of Home Annual Recipes."

Cheesy Mashed Potatoes

- 1 cream cheese, softened (8 oz.)
- 1 c. (4 oz.) shredded cheddar cheese
- 1/3 c. chopped onion
- 2 tsp. salt
- 1/2 c. sour cream
- 1 egg
- 1/2 tsp. pepper
- Additional shredded cheddar cheese, optional

Place potatoes in large saucepan; cover with water. Cover and bring to boil. Cook for 20-25 mins. Or until very tender; drain well.

In mixing bowl, mash potatoes. Add cream cheese, cheddar cheese, sour cream, onion, egg, salt and pepper; beat until fluffy. Transfer to a greased 2-qt. baking dish. Cover and bake at 350° for 40-45 minutes until heated through. Sprinkle with additional cheese if desired. Yield: 10 servings.

Vinaigrette for Mixed Greens

- 2 T. Dijon mustard
- salt and pepper to taste
- 1/4 c. red wine vinegar or cider vinegar
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- Mixed salad green with sliced red onion

In a jar with tight-fitting lid, combine the oil, vinegar, mustard, garlic salt and pepper; shake well. In a salad bowl, combine greens and onion. Drizzle with dressing; toss to coat. Yield: 1 cup, dressing

Pile Burning Begins Southeast and North of Butte

Fire officials from the Butte Ranger District began prescribed fire activities this week which may result in intermittent visible smoke continuing through the end of November.

Firefighters will be burning slash piles in the in the Lime Kiln area south of Butte and Highway 2. They will burn piles under prescribed conditions and monitor the burned piles after ignition to ensure they stay within prescribed boundaries.

Travelers and residents along

Roosevelt Drive (Forest Road 84), Blacktail Creek and in the Lime Kiln area may see smoke from these burns, however little impact from the smoke is expected.

In the future pile burning will also occur in the Lowlands area north of Butte and west of Elk Park.

For more information regarding these prescribed burns, contact the Butte Ranger District at (406) 494-2147.

The Great Outdoors

Lucky hunters, unlucky pheasants and busy bird dog

By Paul Vang

"I'm really a lucky hunter, or that's a really unlucky pheasant," I told Kevin, as we admired the long-tailed pheasant.

We were in North Dakota last week to visit our son, Kevin, and his family, and to spend a few days chasing pheasants, and renewing our father/son hunting traditions.

Kevin started tagging along on pheasant hunts when he was around six years old, and after he was 12 years old and passed hunter safety, he started carrying his own shotgun as we pursued pheasants and other upland birds together.

We had just started our pheasant walk on a wildlife management area, and I was walking along the edge of a shelterbelt that marked the edge of the public hunting area. A pheasant flushed just a couple feet from me and turned on the afterburners to get out of range. I barely had time for a shot and I thought I'd missed.

Kevin watched the action from about 20 yards away and came over and said, "I'm pretty sure you hit the pheasant. I could see it flinch and it looked like it was having trouble staying up."

It's a sick feeling when you know you've wounded a pheasant, or any other game animal, for that matter, and the top priority is to track it down and end its suffering, but it's a fact of life that a wounded pheasant can go a long way and never be found.

We walked into the shelterbelt and started searching the weed and brush patches. At the outer edge of the tree line, Kevin looked out at the wheat stubble field that borders the wildlife management area and said, "That looks like tail feathers out there." Sure enough, a set of pheasant tail feathers was sticking above the tall stubble. We walked over and picked up a dead pheasant.

There was bleeding from its beak. We surmised it had taken a single pellet in the head and went so far and then dropped dead, pitching headfirst into the wheat stubble.

A post-mortem examination that afternoon seemed to confirm that. The body was unmarked; one lucky pellet did the job on a pheasant that had survived its first year, passed its genes on to another generation, and suddenly ran out of luck.

I hunted by myself the previous day, and in fairly pleasant weather I ran into a bunch of younger pheasants. I connected with a young rooster that fell in open cover. I had barely resumed the walk and flushed another one, and dropped it.

I completed a loop back to where I'd started my walk a couple hours earlier and Kiri, my black Labrador retriever, and I stopped for a sandwich break. After that pleasant rest we started a new walk and we hadn't gone for more than 50 yards when Kiri flushed a rooster pheasant. I barely had time to shoot, but could see it go down. It took a while, but Kiri eventually caught up with it, and we'd completed our limit for the day.

Kevin and I took a day off from hunting because of a wet snowy day that would have made long hikes an exercise in misery. It's also a concession to age. Misery isn't as much fun as it might have been 40 years ago.

Wind was the main story of the next outing. The temperature was a moderate 40 degrees and the wind was out of the south, but it wasn't a warm wind. The wind was roaring, and the surf was rolling on Lake Sakakawea, the Missouri River impoundment.

We weren't seeing many pheasants, and most were flushing far ahead. Finally, we flushed a rooster pheasant and both of us shot and we saw it go down. Still it didn't look like a solid hit, and there was no bird in the spot where we saw it drop. This is where Kiri took over. She found the scent and followed it through heavy cover, finally cornering it for Kevin to pick up.

I figure Kiri earned a years-worth of kibble with that bird.

Butte-Silver Bow Bert Mooney Airport to Host a Required Full-Scale Training Exercise to Test Airport Response in the Event of an Emergency

Bert Mooney Airport (BTM) will hold a full-scale emergency response exercise Thursday, November 15, 2018 from 9:00AM – 11:00AM. The drill will test the speed and effectiveness of emergency personnel and BTM staff in the event of an aircraft emergency.

The emergency preparedness exercise is required by the FAA. Commercial airports, such as BTM, must hold such events every three years to maintain their Part 139 Airport Certification which allows commercial flights to operate out of the airport.

The intent of this exercise is to enhance BTM's working relationship with multiple local agencies and test their ability to deploy proper personnel and resources. Multiple emergency agencies from around the City-County and region will assist and evaluate the exercise. Response will be conducted by the Butte-Silver Bow Fire Department, Butte-Silver Bow Sheriff's Office, and Butte-Silver Bow Department of Emergency Services. Medical support will be provided by St. James Medical Center, and

A-1 Ambulance Service. Additional support will be provided by the 15-90 Search and Rescue Team.

This exercise will provide a valuable opportunity to help ensure that first responders are properly prepared to act if such an emergency were to occur. Safety and efficiency of airport operations is of the greatest importance.

This exercise will not cause any delays or interruptions to normal Bert Mooney Airport operations.

Holiday Home Tour supports Butte Symphony, an annual Holiday Tradition

Can you imagine a world without music? The happiest day of the Holiday season is the annual Holiday Home Tour supporting Montana's oldest Symphony. The tour is December 8 from Noon-4:00 pm followed by a Tea Party with cookies. Tickets are $15/ person or 2 for $25. They are available at Books & Books and Keenan Jewelry at the Butte Plaza Mall and at the door of any of our homes. This year we will tour a spacious modern dream home with a kitchen any "Foodie" would covet, one of Butte's most opulent and resplendently restored historic mansions, a masterpiece of painstaking traditional handcrafting by Artisans, the most beautiful modern urban penthouse condo in the Sears Lofts and a man who is a legend for his curated collection of antiques and his Christmas Spirit... literally a Santa for every stair. Keep the piper's piping and drummers drumming this holiday season by supporting the Butte Symphony Guild. All proceeds benefit Butte Symphony.

The Butte Sports Hall of Fame is now accepting nominations for the Class of 2019. Nominations can be made online at ButteSports.com. They can also be submitted by filling out a paper nomination form. Forms will be available at Butte Broadcasting (KBOW, KOPR, Magic) at 660 Dewey Blvd. They can also be downloaded at ButteSports.com. The nomination deadline is midnight on Dec. 31. A public forum will be held on Wednesday, Jan. 9, 2017 at the Metals Sports Bar & Grill. The forum will allow people to make a presentation on behalf of nominees in front of the selection committee. Athletes who are 15 years or more removed from high school and are finished competing at their highest level of their sport are eligible for selection into the Hall. Categories are also available for head coaches, old timers (50 plus years) and contributors. Athletes nominated the last two selection processes (2015 and 2013) do not need to be re-nominated. Re-nominations, though, can be made for the purpose of providing more information on a nominee. Athletes must be nominated to be considered for the Butte Sports Hall of Fame, and only those nominated before the deadline will be considered. No exceptions will be made.

Well, Well, Well

tion may help prevent and treat mental illness, including anxiety and depression.

UCLA researchers took 36 healthy women and fed a third of them yogurt with probiotics, a third non-fermented yogurt-like food with no probiotics, and a third neither. After four weeks, it was obvious that the fermented, probiotic food affected the way the brain responds to its environment. It is now thought that the microbiota in our gut might even affect our character.

According to a 2010 article in Scientific American, high levels of gut-produced serotonin in the blood might play a role in autism. The presence of gastrointestinal dysfunction is linked to increased irritability, tantrums, aggressive behavior and sleep disturbances in children with autistic disorders. The use of probiotics has decreased these symptoms in some people.

This same article notes that irritable bowel syndrome (IBS) may be a result of too much serotonin in the gut. Interestingly, antidepressants are often effective in managing IBS symptoms (gut pain, diarrhea, constipation).

A physician who has been studying the neurobiology of stress and emotions for many years has said that "signals are sent from the intestine to the brain, and these signals can be modulated by diet." These observations will encourage research and new ways of treating both physical and mental disorders.

If probiotics aren't already in your wellness program, consider adding them for your overall health. Your gut says so, and your brain agrees.

Do you enjoy being around young children?
 Would you like to run your own business?
 Become a registered child care provider! There is a need in your community for daytime, evening and weekend care for children birth through school age. Benefits to becoming a registered child care provider include: serving families who are receiving the Best Beginnings Scholarship and receiving child care payments directly from the State; participating in the Child Care Food Program and receiving reimbursement for serving nutritious meals and snacks to the children in your care.
 Butte 4-C's is a regional non-profit organization that specializes in supporting child care providers in Silver Bow, Powell, Deer Lodge, Granite, Madison, and Beaverhead counties. They are available to answer questions about the application process and will provide ongoing technical assistance and training in early childhood education. Call 1-800-794-4061 for more information.

Breakfast with Santa, Ice Sculpting Contest return December 8

The Annual Ice Sculpting Contest returns to Uptown Butte for the 18th time on Saturday, December 8th. And, that means that Santa will be taking a break from his busy schedule to join the event in the morning to have breakfast with his favorite people -- the families of Butte -- at the Metals at 8 W. Park Street from 9:30 am until noon. This year, all children under 12 eat for free. Santa will also be bringing small gifts for children who join him with their parents.

Speaking of the 18th Annual Ice Sculpting Contest, ice carvers are still needed at all levels of expertise, from novice to expert. Anyone with an interest is invited to join the fun and compete for prizes and bragging rights.

If you would like to find out more about being matched with a block of ice, or sponsoring a block to be carved, contact Corey Gransbery at coreygrans@gmail.com or call 529-4795 for details.

Also, there is still time if you would like to be recognized as a sponsor of the Stroll or the Ice Sculpting Contest. Contact Mainstreet Uptown Butte for details at 565-2249.

Thank you to sponsors who have made the event possible including major sponsorship by Northwestern Energy, and KXLF/KBZK-TV. Other much appreciated sponsors include Steele's Furniture, the M&M Bar and Cafe, and the Metals Sports Bar and Grill.

For those who would like to watch the sculptures appear, everyone is invited to join the rest of Butte in the Historic Uptown for an Icy Reception. Throughout the day, enjoy as the 18th Annual Ice Sculpting Contest is revealed from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Over the past decade and a half, it has become a great day to shop for presents, catch a meal at one of the Uptown's many great restaurants, or just walk around and see it all unfold.

Until 3 p.m, look for action all over the Hill as sculptors chip away at ice blocks (each weighs more than 340 pounds) in front of Uptown businesses. Then judges will cast a cold eye on the sculptures and rank them in adult, rookie and child categories for prizes and bragging rights.

Shoppers can watch the progress throughout the day as carvers uncover beautiful sculptures from within frozen ice blocks. Look for ice sculpting teams competing for prizes in a variety of categories at locations all over the Uptown.

For more details call Mainstreet Uptown Butte at 497-6464 or visit the Ice Sculpting Contest 2018 Facebook event page
