Design work underway for new mining heritage center at museum

By Robin Jordan

Planning for a new mining heritage center kicked into high gear last week at the World Museum of Mining as a team of architects from two firms visited Butte to meet with museum officials and other stakeholders and begin designing the new project.

Last November, the museum announced plans to build a new facility with approximately 5,000 square feet of floor space to house its entrance and gift shop, offices, meeting and conference space and a fireproof, climate-controlled archives area for the museum's large collection of photographs and other records. The museum's board of directors estimated the cost at $2.5 million.

Last week, the museum's director, Jeanette Kopf, said the plans have been changed somewhat after architects from Mosaic Architecture of Helena and DLR Group, based in Phoenix, AZ held several listening sessions with the museum's staff, volunteers and members of the public and presented several preliminary design plans. The preferred plan now is to build two new smaller structures that fit more with the scale of other buildings at the museum, one to house the archives and a second for the museum's entrance and space for meetings and more exhibit display area, and to renovate the museum's current main building to include space for a small café, gift shop and other amenities. The entrance will be moved further north so that visitors come in through the central courtyard looking toward the Orphan Girl headframe.

Kopf said the cost estimate will be revised once architects have a preliminary design, possibly by the end of the month.

Dennis Bree of DLR Group said stakeholders were asked to come up with a list of challenges the museum faces. Some of those included the need for more bathrooms, more room at the entrance for tour groups, meeting and display space and a cafe so that visitors don't have to leave the museum to get something to eat. Bree said the architects also want to draw visitors out into the center courtyard, where the museum's main features are outdoors—the headframe, Hell Roaring Gulch mining town and the Miners' Memorial.

Jeff Downhour, principal at Mosaic Architecture, said the designers are looking at the project more as creating an interpretive center for mining history rather than a museum. The new construction will enhance the current offerings and draw visitors in, he said. For instance, he said, those coming into the center courtyard would be able to see where people are getting their helmets and other gear for underground tours.

The two new buildings, to the northeast of the current main building, will be connected by a covered, porch-like walkway and will be designed to fit better into the look of the museum than a single, large building, designers said.

Plans will also solve some of the museum's current problems and allow for year-round use, Kopf said.

complete, visitors will come into a larger entrance building with room for larger tours to be organized. The space will also allow the museum to hold meetings and public gatherings as well as to display new exhibits.

Plans for the new archives include a safe and secure space where the museum's collection of more than 10,000 photographs and other historic documents can be kept, catalogued and viewed by the public.

Kopf said the new buildings and improvements will allow the museum to once again offer summer youth camps, which were suspended this year.

"Currently, there's no place to go when we have a group of kids and it rains or for indoor group activities," Kopf said.

Once the architects have completed a preliminary design, Kopf said, the museum will be seeking more public input and fundraising for the project can begin in earnest.

"It's hard to go out and start looking for donations before we have a design and we can say, 'Here's what we want to do,'" Kopf said.

Meanwhile, other improvements are ongoing at the museum, Kopf said. This week, the St. Helena's Church building will be getting a new roof, paid for by a grant.

The World Museum of Mining is open for visitors Mondays through Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sundays from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Underground tours are also available daily and reservations are recommended. For more information or tour reservations, please call 723-7211.

Currently, visitors enter through the crowded gift shop and have to go through a narrow hallway to exhibits and Hell Raising Gulch village at the rear and the headframe and underground tours to the north. Once new construction is Tim Adams was going to be a baseball superstar. Or so I thought.

During the 1997 season opener for the Butte Copper Kings, Adams hit a home run over the 450-foot sign in dead center field at Alumni Coliseum in Butte.

Yes, it was 450 feet to center at Alumni. The Montana Tech Orediggers did not want a warning track cut into their football field, so the baseball field went around the end zone.

That gave the Mining City the distinction of having the largest field in pro baseball in terms of field dimensions.

Nobody hit a home run to center in Butte, not even in batting practice. Except Adams. He is the only one. He crushed a line drive that just cleared the tall green fence.

I was lucky enough to cover that game for The Montana Standard, and I gushed to sports editor Bruce Sayler

It is always too early to give up on your sports dreams

when I got back to the newsroom.

"Tim Adams," I said, talking like I was Peter Gammons, "is going to hit at least 20 home runs this season. At least."

The number 20 was significant in Butte, too. That is how many home runs the great Cecil Fielder hit during his legendary 1982 season in the Mining City.

Fielder also hit 28 doubles and drove in 68 runs in 69 games.

So, my prophecy to put Adams in Fielder's company was, to say the least, a very bold prediction.

It turns out I was wrong. Very, very wrong. Not only did Adams not hit 20 bombs that year, he did not even hit two.

Adams' home run to center turned out to be the only one he ever hit in professional baseball.

When the 1998 season opened, the former 26th round draft pick of the Anaheim Angels was out of professional baseball. His career lasted just 38 games.

By the end of June 1997, it was obvious that my Adams prediction was dead wrong. He was very impressive in batting practice, slamming ball after ball to the football press box at Alumni. But he hit a curve ball like Pedro Cerrano.

A week or two into the season, I turned my attention to Steve "Hollywood" Hagins. He was going to be the next Copper Kings to star in the big leagues. Or so I thought.

Hagins had a good season in Butte that summer, hitting .351 with 17 home runs and 56 RBIs in 64 games. He hit balls off the press box in games, and every girl at the Vu Villa wanted to be his.

The Hagins story also fell short of a true Hollywood script. He played 12 games at Class AA Erie in the Eastern League 2000. He tried playing for a few independent teams before leaving pro ball for good by 2001.

When it comes to baseball prospects, you just never know. Actually, that is true for prospects of all sports.

Ryan Leaf was drafted by the Chargers with the second overall pick of the 1998 NFL Draft. Two years later, the Patriots picked Tom Brady with the 199th selection.

Leaf was a notorious bust, and Tom Terrific is still going strong.

That is something to keep in mind if your son or daughter failed to make the "All-Star team" this summer.

Major League Baseball teams and there legion of scouts miss on baseball prospects all the time. They miss on way more players than they hit on, and that is after the players have graduated from high school or college.

So, it is safe to assume that the Little League All-Star selection process might have missed some future stars, too.

The Copper Kings, the Pioneer League baseball team that left town following the 2000 season, were full of prospects who missed. More than 95 percent of them missed.

In 1999, K-Rod came from Venezuela with his gift of a right arm and his million-dollar signing bonus. Everyone knew he was going to make the big leagues, and we were right.

K-Rod was a star on the 2002 World Series champion Angels team, and he is ranked No. 4 in Major League Baseball history for saves.

At 36, Rodriguez is currently playing for the Long Island Ducks of the independent Atlantic League, holding onto the dream of another shot in the Show.

For every story like K-Rod, there are more like Skylar Knuchel, a guy who found success because he just kept on playing.

One of the true good guys, Knuchel was a Deer Lodge kid who had no business being a 1,000-yard rusher in the Frontier Conference, but nobody could tell him that.

Knuchel was a decent enough athlete, but his talent level was well below that of Drew Savage, the Great Falls Russell superstar who signed with Montana Tech the same time Knuchel did.

Savage, a guy many figured could not miss, was faster, quicker and had much more natural running ability than Knuchel.

While Savage's career was marred by injuries, the hard-working Knuchel led the Frontier in rushing with 1,012 yards during his junior season in 2009. He ran for nine touchdowns in 11 games.

He also led the league in determination.

While we usually focus on the superstars, it is guys like Knuchel who show us that it is always too early to give up on your sports dreams.

Jim Haugen is the former executive director of the Montana High School Association and a man whose opinion I trust more than just about anyone.

Mr. Haugen told me that when he hears about a boy in junior high dominating the competition, he looks at the boy's legs. If that boy has a bunch of leg hair, he knows to take that dominance with a grain of salt.

We all knew that kid in junior high who developed faster than everyone else. We thought he was destined for greatness, but he fizzled away when the rest of us saw our voices deepen.

If you are not the coach's kid and did not play shortstop and bat leadoff every game as a 12-year-old player, shake it off.

If your middle school football coach put you on the bench more than he played you at receiver, do not worry about it.

If your parents do not have the time and or money to put you on a travel team, the sporting world has not passed you by.

Right now we have too many kids who give up because they are not an All-Star by age 10. Our culture has made kids so afraid to fail that they fail themselves by giving up way too soon.

Whatever you do, tell these kids to go out for the team again next year, then the year after that.

Sure that player might not be the next Francisco Rodriguez, Tom Brady or Cecil Fielder. He might not even be the next Tim Adams.

But who knows? Maybe he is the next Skylar Knuchel.

The world really needs more people like that.

What's Cooking

Banana Pudding

By Debbie Sorensen

Recently I was engaged in a pudding discussion while sharing a meal. It was fun to think about the warm memories that this particular dessert stirred up in our minds. What can beat remembering the exquisite texture of the thick top layer of that special chocolate pudding? Or the amazing aroma of warm cornstarch pudding? Even, licking the spoon to get the absolute last taste of pudding from the sauce pan? Hmmm, delicious.

The following recipe comes from Esther Matteson of Bremen Indiana, with her submission to The Farm Wife News magazine. You'll find that there is no comparison between this recipe and the instant pudding mixes from the shelves in the grocery stores.

Layered Banana Pudding

1/3 c. all-purpose flour
2 c. milk
2 T. butter or margarine
1 c. heavy cream, whipped
Chopped walnuts, optional

2/3 c. packed brown sugar
2 egg yolks, beaten
1 tsp. vanilla extract
4 to 6 firm bananas, sliced

In a medium saucepan, combine the flour and brown sugar; stir in milk. Cook and stir over medium heat until thickened and bubbly; cook and stir 1 minute more. Remove from the heat. Gradually stir about 1 cup hot mixture into egg yolks. Return all to the saucepan. Bring to a gentle boil; cook and stir for 2 minutes. Remove from the heat; stir in butter and vanilla. Cool to room temperature, stirring occasionally. Fold in the whipped cream. Layer a third of the pudding in a 2-qt. glass bowl; top with half of the bananas. Repeat layers. Top with remaining pudding. Sprinkle nuts if desired (or another light topping of choice). Cover and chill at least 1 hour before serving. Yield: 8 servings.

The politics of cruelty

By Robin Jordan

Last week, national news services went crazy with reports of minor children of illegal immigrants being separated from their parents and held in large detention centers at our country's southern border as part of the current administration's "zero tolerance" policies.

The horror stories, most likely true-- because it's hard to imagine that you could make these things up-- include separating mothers from children as young as one year old without telling them they were being taken--telling them the children were going to have pictures taken or taken for baths; holding large numbers of children in centers like an abandoned WalMart; and holding immigrants for hours or days in kennel-like pens without proper bedding or access to clean drinking water.

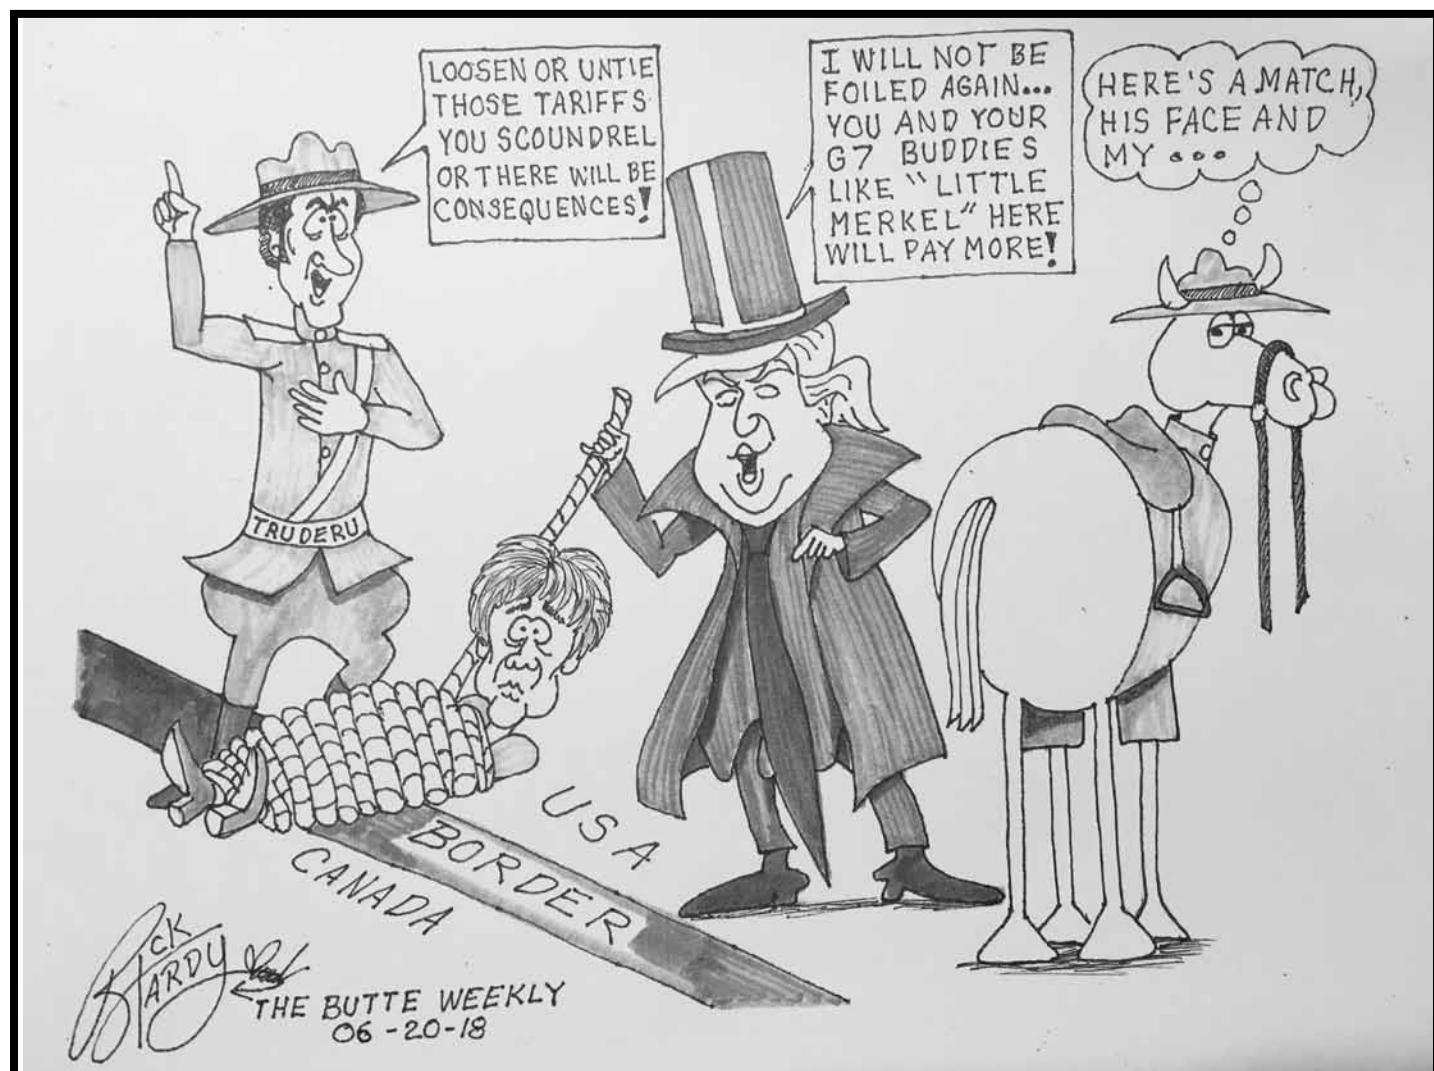

President Donald Trump said he hates separating the children from their parents, but that his administration is merely enforcing a "horrible law" and that it's up to Democratic legislators to change it. This is completely false; the Homeland Security Department's longstanding policy is to separate parents from their children only when they are referred for criminal prosecution. Trump's administration has decided to prosecute all illegal border crossings. Under previous administrations, families were rarely prosecuted.

As to the "horrible law," the administration refers to policies that deal with unaccompanied minors. Remember that the children wouldn't be unaccompanied if all of the parents weren't being charged under Trump's new policy. Under the 1996 Flores Settlement, children are released to family members or sponsors who can care for them while their immigration cases are resolved. The Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008 (which Trump wrongly calls a "Democratic rule") determines that unaccompanied minors be transferred to the custody of Health and Human Services.

To add insult to injury, we were treated to the spectacle of U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions implying biblical scripture supports enforcing draconian law on the immigrants and their children. So, now Trump and these horrible new policies are ordained by God? Even Trump's staunchest Christian supporters are railing at that one.

It's all politically motivated, of course, meant to coerce Democratic support for immigration policy legislation solely created by Republicans. Apparently, Republican legislators have no appetite for a more moderate, bipartisan bill.

According to the Trump administration, the forced separation policy is necessary as a deterrent to those contemplating crossing the border and coming into the country illegally. You have to wonder what the rest of the world thinks as media reports continue of holding immigrants in concentration-camp-like facilities and separating babies and young children from their parents. It looks like a crappy political ploy to force the administration's border-wall plan through congress, not some directive from God to "follow the law."

Quite frankly, it stinks. We hope it backfires as soon as possible and that journalists continue to chip away at the secrecy that currently pervades these border operations so that there can be real and lasting changes. Right now, it just looks like holding children as hostages in a political war.

A Bonanza for Real Estate Investors

By George Waring

Here's a shocker for you! The Center on Budget and Public Policy's Director of Federal Tax Policy, Chuck Marr, reported in May that the commercial real estate industry is "perhaps the biggest winner" from last year's Trumpian "tax reform." The Trump Organization was well served by a "tax reform" engineered by Trump's Goldman Sachs-led economists.

How so?

According to the Center's study, reductions in taxes for real estate investors over the first decade of the Republican "tax reform" will save the Trumpian industry $1.9 trillion. Plus bonuses from additional tax breaks mentioned below.

How about those struggling people that populist Trump shed crocodile tears over in 2016? According to the Center, Trump now backs a House proposal to force over 4,000,000 low-income households to absorb rent increases of $3.2 billion through 2017.

How so?

The House proposal eliminates the deduction enacted under Obama for low wage-earning parents who are renters. It's the child care cost deduction. Such parents receiving federal rental assistance could claim child care costs that enabled them to work. These child care costs were deducted from the family's income "in determining how much rent these families were required to pay."

Eliminating that child care deduction "boosts these families' rents markedly. Overall, the affected low-income working families would pay $1,300 more a year in rent, on average, leaving less room in their already tight budgets for everything else."

The Republican "tax reform" gave real estate investors a reduction in taxes of over $100 million per year. Now, Republicans propose that working low-income parents get a rent raise averaging $1,300 yearly.

Chuck Marr writes, "Virtually all of the 700,000 or so affected families have incomes below the poverty line -- in most cases, far below -- and hence would find it hard to pay much higher rents. The 1 million or so children in those families are already among the nation's most vulnerable; the Trump plan would expose them to added hardship and risk."

Is this White Christian Nationalist Evangelical economics? Or is it greed and bigotry? Do these Old Testament-inspired economists have some Biblically-based mathematical scale to factor in the value of folks obsessed with the End Times versus low-income poor people trying to survive in a resurrected 1920's America?

Did it really require Goldman Sachs trained, hedge-fund financed, tax-avoiding experts to create this Gospel-condemned outcome? Or just a lying megalomaniac possessing the criminal knowledge of how to transform multiple bankruptcies into an American businessman success story? Plus his massive following of God-seeking wanna-bes?

In addition to the new tax law's $1.9 billion savings for real estate investors mentioned above, it contains a new deduction for "pass-through" income. Marr writes that it "disproportionately benefits the real estate industry, especially wealthy real estate investors." It exempts income from a specific type of real estate pass-through – real estate investment trusts (REITs) – from many earlier provisions that were designed "to prevent wealthy business owners from reclassifying their wage and salary income as pass-through income in order to get the new deduction."

Marr writes that the new tax breaks for real estate investors include what is called the "like-kind exchange" loophole. This lets individuals or firms trade similar assets (such as buildings or art work) without triggering any capital gains tax on the increase in the value of those assets before the trade or exchange was made. Marr notes that the 2017 tax law at first had repealed this loophole for everyone. But then someone slipped in a sentence that preserved it for the real estate industry. Was this a Gary Cohn or Steve Mnuchin wink and a nod toward His Highness?

The law retained the "stepped-up basis" tax break. Heirs of an estate don't pay any tax "on the appreciation of an asset (such as

Marie Lillian McBride was born as Marie Hollywood on October 13, 1944 at Garfield Hospital in Washington, DC to Walter John Hollywood of Waterbury, Connecticut and Mildred Lillian Maul Hollywood of Buffalo, New York. She was their only child and grew up in Washington, DC.

Marie graduated from Western High School in Washington DC in 1962. She went on to attend George Washington University's Columbian College from 1962-64, taking college introductory courses and some nursing classes. She then transferred to Georgetown University in Washington, DC from 1964 – 66, where her major was psychology. She may have been conferred an A.B. on September 30, 1966.

Following her education at Georgetown she joined AmeriCorps VISTA (Volunteers In Service To America), an organization to help alleviate poverty. Later she took a counseling job on an Indian Reservation in Montana. There she met and married William (Bill) Allan McBride Jr. They were married August 19, 1972. She became a stepmother to Bill's two sons Jon Patrick McBride -- then 10 years old -- and Sean Michael McBride -- then 8 years old. Bill and Marie had a son, James Kelly McBride, on May 18, 1973. The marriage dissolved in divorce in 1981; both continued living in Butte, Montana to raise their son, Jim.

Marie worked for over a decade in the Butte, Montana city employment service office. She also was employed as a medical transcriptionist periodically throughout the rest of her life.

Marie chose to relocate following some of her son's military duty station changes in the Marine Corps. The locations she resided included Newport, NC; Walla Walla, WA; and finally Fredericksburg, VA from approximately 2008 to her death.

As a baby, Marie was dedicated at St. Mathew's Catholic Church in Washington, DC but later embraced evangelical Christian beliefs. She was a woman of strong faith, and throughout her life she was consistently involved in churches and various Bible studies. She was an avid supporter of Compassion International, and for years she faithfully supported a Bolivian boy, Noel Ramos, born December 18, 1999 to a family of nine children.

Marie faced many health challenges for an extended period of her life with unwavering grace and strength. She valiantly battled breast, thyroid, liver and pancreatic cancers for over 17 years. Marie broke her hip twice, and developed dementia, which led to her residing at Woodmont Center Retirement Home in Fredericksburg for the past 18 or so months. She likely recently suffered a series of strokes that ushered her to the Gates of Glory on January 5th 2018. Per her wishes, she will be buried in her beloved state of Montana.

Marie is survived by her son, LtCol James Kelly McBride (44), and her grandson, Orin James McBride (12).

an office building) that occurred during the previous owner's lifetime."

Finally, the new law increased "the amount that a wealthy couple can pass on tax free to their heirs from $11 million to $22 million by doubling the estate tax exemption." Looks like Melania and Donald certainly took care of all the kiddies. Maybe they'll get pardons to boot!

Chuck Marr's summary: "A wealthy real estate investor can now pay a much lower tax rate on the rental income from his property, can exchange properties over decades without paying capital gains tax, and can pass on millions of dollars more in assets, including real estate, to his heirs tax-free."

Don't Let Your Investments Go on "Vacation"

Summer is here – and so is vacation season. Americans spend a lot on their summer getaways – more than $100 billion in 2017 alone, as reported in Travel and Leisure magazine. When you hit the road, you will enjoy getting away from your regular tasks, but there's one part of your life that should never take a break – your investments.

To keep your investments working consistently and efficiently for you, consider these suggestions:

Match the right investment with the right "job." You hire an electrician to install a light fixture, you employ a plumber to clear a clogged drain, and you would not expect either one to work on the other's project. In a way, this view of a division of labor is similar to how you might look at different investments. In general, you purchase stocks with the hope of achieving the growth necessary to help you meet long-term goals, such as a comfortable retirement. On the other hand, when you purchase certain fixed-rate investments such as certificates of deposit (CDs) or money market accounts, you know they won't provide as much growth potential, but are available to fund a short-term goal – such as a dream vacation.

Evaluate investments' performance relative to your goals.

Some people think the only way to evaluate their investments' performance is to track them against a well-known market index, such as the S&P 500. However, using an index as a measuring stick has some drawbacks, one of which is the lack of a personal connection to your situation. Look at it this way: In many types of organizations, you typically go through performance reviews, where your work is assessed in terms of how well it helped you move toward your goals – and you can follow the same process with your investments. Specifically, you can measure their performance by how effective they are in helping you move toward your financial objectives. For example, if you need your portfolio to provide you with a certain rate of return to meet specific retirement goals at a designated age, but you find that you are not currently on track toward meeting these goals, you may need to adjust your investment mix to potentially provide you with a higher return.

Be aware, though, that seeking higher return potential will likely mean taking on more risk. You may want to consult with a financial professional to make sure you find a risk/reward ratio suitable for your goals and risk tolerance.

Look for hard-working investments. Some investments work especially hard. Some stocks, or investments containing stocks, pay dividends. Instead of taking the dividends, you can choose to reinvest them, purchasing even more shares – and increased share ownership is one key to helping build financial resources for the long term. Dividend reinvestment is typically automatic, so once you have chosen this option, there's really no extra work on your part. (Keep in mind, though, that companies are not obligated to pay dividends, and they can be reduced or eliminated at any time.)

In the investing arena, as in many endeavors, hard work can be rewarding. So look for opportunities to keep your investments gainfully employed throughout your life.

Alley Rally has multiple locations

As temperatures begin rise across Montana many of us are beginning to work on our lawns and on "spring cleaning" in our homes. With that in mind Butte-Silver Bow County will begin our annual Alley Rally program. Butte-Silver Bow County will be making several changes to benefit more of the community. These changes include multiple locations instead of one centralized location. The locations and dates of activity are listed below:

June 15th and 16th - Spolar, High Altitude Center, and Sesame Street
June 22nd and 23rd - Cinders Park, Old Glory, and Missoula Gulch

Each location will be staffed by Butte-Silver Bow employee(s) to assist in placing items in the garbage containers. The City-County of Butte-Silver will also be offering large garbage containers to neighborhood cleanup efforts available by contacting John Moody from the Community Enrichment Department at (406) 497-6525. The City-County of Butte-Silver Bow would also like to remind the public that the landfill will be open 7 days a week from 8:00 am to 5:30 pm at the main site and 5:30 pm to 8:00 pm at the afterhours site. These hours will stay in effect until the end of October. As always, we remind the public that all loads going to the landfill are required to be covered.

For any additional questions or comments please contact John Moody from the Community Enrichment Department at (406) 497-6525.

make plans and figure out alternatives in the quiet of the evening than it is to struggle through the same issues during the day. For example, if there are times when you are over-eating, you can figure out if you need to eat more earlier in the day, eat more often, or have healthier snacks available.

Work on challenging any negative thoughts that come into your mind. You can say to yourself 'Is there any basis for this?' or 'Is this really true?'. If you don't accept the thoughts as fact and consistently challenge negative thinking, it will eventually become less frequent, or even go away.

Reframe any negative thoughts that come to mind to be more positive and think of them as more realistic. For example, 'I have done this in the past, and I was good at it. I am sure I can do it this time too.' If your subconscious is feeding you negativity, think of positive traits you possess as well as past successes. Build yourself up in the face of feelings that try to tear you down.

In our society, we are also motivated by rewards. Consider ways to reward yourself for reaching the small goals and come up with a bigger reward for the day you reach the big goal. Stay away from food rewards and make rewards relevant to what you are working toward. New workout shoes can be a good prize for reaching a workout goal, and a new article of clothing is nice for a weight goal.

We really are in control of our own destinies. When we set our sights on what we want to achieve, believing that we can do it makes it possible. Imagine your life as it will be when you have already reached your goal. Think of all the details in your life that will be different. You can get there if you believe in yourself!

We have discussed goal setting and other aspects of making successful changes in our lives. Honestly believing in ourselves is essential to that success. We can also be influential in holding us back. It comes down to those negative thoughts. Our own subconscious can be the big challenge and although this is a tough one, we can overcome it.

As a first step, make a list of prior accomplishments. It is a good reminder of our capabilities, as well as a foundation for being successful in the future. You can include minor as well as major successes and highlight some of your own unique talents and strengths.

Next, utilize your support people. If you struggle getting past something negative, talk to a friend, spouse, relative or other person you have found to be supportive. Confide your closely-held thoughts and be open to working through them in the discussion that follows. Having defeating thoughts does not mean that you cannot reach your goals. With perseverance, you can work through them.

Remember to set goals to work toward. Be realistic and set several small goals between now and when you reach your goal. Goals cannot be made for other people and others cannot make goals for you. A person may be inclined to set a goal for their spouse to lose weight, for instance. You can set a goal to be supportive of a spouse or other person who wishes to get in shape or lose weight but each of us must set our own goals.

Consider keeping a journal, or at least reflecting at the end of each day. If you are struggling, this is an opportunity to do some problem solving. It is easier to

Headaches

If you are plagued by headaches, migraine, sinus, tension or hangover, you are in good company. Whether you get infrequent headaches, or you have been getting chronic headaches all your life, knowing how to prevent or treat them is important, especially when you "have no time for a headache".

All of us experience mild head pain now and again, and usually know why: too much to drink, intense light or heat, not enough sleep, dehydration, you name it. But intense headaches, like migraines, affect over 30 million people in America, and many just pop a chemical pill with the hope that the pain goes away. Usually, the pain does abate, but often leaves behind side-effects like grogginess, digestive upsets, dry mouth, or the inability to function for a few hours or a day. Also, once the medication wears off, another headache often replaces the last one.

This cycle of pain/pain relief can create rebound headaches, not to mention a dependence on the pills. Often, also, the medication is expensive and comes with an extensive list of other health threatening side effects, and long-term repercussions. So what can we put in place of Tylenol, aspirin, or other more heavy-duty pain-killing drugs? First of all, look at lifestyle.

Do we have too much to do and too little time to do it in? Are we sleeping poorly, skipping meals, living on caffeine and sugar and fast food? All these shortcuts to living can contribute to headaches, and some small changes can help alleviate them.

Often, food sensitivities can trigger a headache. We all know that sufferers of migraines have been warned off red wine, chocolate, beer and cheese, but other foods, even raspberries, nuts, or anything pickled, can lead to pain. These foods contain high levels of the amino acids tyramine and phenylalanine, which seem to be connected to headaches. Food additives like monosodium glutamate (MSG), aspartame (artificial sweeteners), sodium nitrate (found in bacon and other processed meats), are often to blame as well.

Chronic worry can also give us a headache. You might roll your eyes at this suggestion, but learning to meditate, especially if you have chronic headaches, can truly help reduce or eliminate repetitive, destructive thought patterns. If you think you don't have time to learn this technique, have you considered a trip to your chiropractor, massage therapist or acupuncturist to manipulate the physical areas of tension causing pain? Spinal and neck adjustments, muscle relaxation, and stimulation of areas of energy that get stuck can be avenues to painlessness.

If you prefer taking a pill to making changes in your life habits or taking the time to see a health care practitioner, there are natural products available that have shown promise in reducing headache pain.

The mineral magnesium, which is found in leafy green vegetables, nuts and whole grains, can decrease the severity and frequency of migraines. It is a smooth-muscle relaxer, and is thought to help regulate pain by preventing blood-vessel spasms. Professionals believe magnesium can help people wean themselves off medications that cause rebound migraines.

Vitamin B2 increases mitochondrial efficiency, which, when compromised, is often the cause of migraines. Mitochondrial activity is the energy-producing detoxification center of the cell, and research has shown that taking B2 (riboflavin) reduces the frequency and duration of migraines.

Because inflammation is linked to headaches, controlling it can control the pain. Swollen blood vessels on the surface of the brain send pain signals to the brainstem, so keeping those blood vessels calm is important. An anti-inflammatory diet, including omega-3 fatty acids found in fish-oil supplements, reduces the inflammatory response. In a 2002 study, adolescents taking fish oil had an 83 percent reduction in headache fre-

'Off-grid living' subject of Archives presentation

Ever wonder what "off-grid" living really means? The Butte-Silver Bow Public Archives will continue its Brown Bag Lunch series on Wednesday, June 27, with a presentation by Christopher Borton about off-grid living in Montana. Borton will share his 20+ years of experiences and technical expertise on what it's like to be self-sufficient and unplugged from the power grid. The director of Sage Mountain Center will go over the latest advancements in equipment, discuss the costs, as well as the lifestyle adjustments needed for generating your own electricity from the sun and wind.

Christopher Borton is director, co-founder, and designer of Sage Mountain Center LLC, an award-winning off-grid educational facility promoting personal and environmental awareness. For over 20 years Sage Mountain Center has provided sustainable living education in everything from straw bale/cordwood construction and solar/wind power to organic gardening, composting toilets and vegan living. A fourth-generation builder, Chris is a founding board member of the Montana Renewable Energy Association (VP from 2003-2012) as well as on the board of the Montana Energy Education Council. Coupled with his residential and small business consultation services, he continues to promote proven sustainable methods and techniques at all levels, from remote villages in Guatemala to federal agencies and large corporations.

The presentation will begin at noon and run about an hour at the Archives, 17 W. Quartz. Guests are encouraged to bring a sack lunch. Coffee and water will be provided.

Brown Bag Lunches are held the second and fourth Wednesdays of every month. Upcoming lectures will focus on topics of local interest. For more information, contact the Archives at 782-3280.

quency and a 78 percent reduction in headache duration. (It's interesting to note that younger adults have more success with fatty acids than older adults).

The herbs feverfew and butterbur have shown great success in treating headache. Feverfew seems to reduce the overall inflammatory response in the body and butterbur, which is also used for allergies, reduces inflammation and relaxes smooth muscles.

Conveniently, many of the substances listed above are combined in various natural headache medications. Additionally, homeopathic remedies also treat headache pain, and are convenient since they dissolve under the tongue, acting quickly. You don't need a glass of water to take them, they can be taken often without side effects, and they are safe to use with prescription medication.

If you are plagued with frequent headaches, or just find yourself suffering from them due to daily stress, treat them naturally and effectively with nutrients and wise health choices.

Chronic wasting disease a concern for Montana hunters

By Paul Vang

It might be fishing season, but the 2019 big game hunting seasons are just two and a half months away, when the archery season for deer and elk start the first Saturday in September, which this year is September 1.

Last year, deer infected with chronic wasting disease (CWD) were found in two areas, south central Montana, and north central Montana. You may recall that Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks opened late hunting seasons in those areas to get more samples of deer tissue to better determine the extent of CWD in Montana.

A couple weeks ago, at the annual conference of the Outdoor Writers Association of America, held this year in Fort Wayne, Indiana, a panel of wildlife biologists presented the latest research on CWD.

Chronic Wasting Disease was first found in a mule deer in a Colorado research facility 50 years ago. Since then, CWD has spread to both wild and captive cervid (elk, deer and moose) populations in 23 states and two Canadian provinces. That includes Wyoming, just to the south of the south central Montana hunting district, and Alberta, to the north of the north central district.

Wyoming mule deer numbers are declining at a rate of 21 percent per year, and the decline is attributed to CWD. In Wisconsin, which has a number of captive deer operations, offering "canned hunts," CWD rates are increasing dramatically.

While there has been a lot of CWD research, it is clear that there are still unknowns about how the disease gets transmitted. The disease is carried by prions, a form of protein. If CWD gets in a deer population, those prions become part of the environment, and can transmit CWD even after no deer have been in the area for several years or more.

It is proven that captive deer populations are CWD incubators, yet some states, such as Wisconsin, still allow captive herds. Bryan Richards, with the USGS National Wildlife Health Center in Madison WI, noted that transportation of animals from one facility to another is a factor in spread of CWD. Feeding deer also tends to concentrate deer numbers, making them vulnerable to CWD.

We might recall that a captive elk herd in the Philipsburg area had a CWD problem, and the entire herd was destroyed and the carcasses were incinerated. In 2000, a sportsmen-backed constitutional initiative, I-143, banned new elk farms, transportation of captive wildlife, and canned hunts. Since then, many of the captive elk farms have gone out of business.

As far as wild populations, the panel agreed that reducing deer numbers, especially bucks, is important.

There is belief that predators, such as wolves, can have a beneficial effect in controlling deer numbers and taking diseased animals out of the population.

Currently, there is no known impact of CWD on humans. On the other hand, Richards advocated that hunters who harvest animals in an area known to have CWD should have them tested. He emphatically added, "If it tests positive for CWD, do not eat it."

The CWD information pages on the FWP website also advise that consumption of infected animals should be avoided.

The issue of reducing buck numbers might be thorny for some, especially people who want bucks to live longer in order to grow big antlers, something espoused by Quality Deer Management (QDM) advocates. I asked an old college classmate, a retired midwestern deer biologist, for his thoughts. He confirmed that bucks pick up CWD at least three times the rate for females, adding, "Historically, we always focused on shooting females to reduce herds. But, it seems to me that we need to shoot both males and females...and impose a harvest mortality rate that exceeds the force rate of infection."

Obviously, the CWD issue will not go away in Montana. If we have found some infected animals in the state, it is likely that there are more infected deer running around, spreading disease.

Deer hunters like to see lots of deer, but what we need is fewer numbers, widely dispersed. It may make hunting more difficult but that's better than the alternative.

Paul Vang's book, "Sweeter than Candy, A Hunter's Journal" is available at Books & Books, Cavanaugh's County Celtic, The Bookstore in Dillon, or online at <http://writingoutdoors.com>.

CROSSWORD

Carousel Corner

By Larry Hoffman

All of the horses are now in place on the Carousel and we have begun testing and tuning the mechanism. It is a heartwarming sight to see all of the ponies dancing around in their circle after all their years being created out of imagination and waiting for their chance to prance.

Our volunteers are doing all we can to finish the myriad of details involved in the building and all that is necessary to make our Carousel operational and successful, creating memories for new generations. It is a sometimes daunting process, where each minute of delay weighs heavily as June ticks away.

Our Carousel will not be ready for riders but we will be open for people to see how close we are when the pool has its ribbon cutting and open house Thursday from 3:00 to 6:00, and again when the pool opens at noon, Saturday, until 2:00. The place will be a mess, and access will be limited to the main carousel room, but stop in. At the same time, please realize all the volunteers there will be focused on getting finished and won't have time for a lot of chit-chat. Better yet, ask if there is anything you can do to help!

The two projects will be an amazing new era for the kids (of all ages) of Butte, surrounding towns, and visitors from everywhere. Stodden Park will be one of the go-to happy places this summer, and then shine even brighter next year after the rest of the improvement plan funded by MRI and the Washington Foundation are completed.

Like the swimming season, construction work is packed into a few months of good weather and the long-needed road work on Dewey will sometimes make access to the park challenging, but far from impossible, for this summer at least.

If you want to help us meet our target date and have some time on your hands, stop by and see if you can do anything to help. We are all volunteers and not always there, but it only takes about three minutes to turn off Dewey and stop and ask if help is needed to clean, paint, lift, move, all jobs requiring little or no experience, on up into more detailed work like carpentry and wiring.

You are welcome to just stop and look, too, but try not to slow the work. Taking a peek might pique your interest and lead to pitching in to be a part of this wonderful endeavor.

I also want to remind everyone that we still need donations to assure we have the funds to get this operation on its feet. Like any business, that takes time, and our manager, Mike Sawicki, will have plenty on his mind and in his capable hands without worrying about money, too.

We have pretty well moved out of the old shop at the mall, so there will be an interim period without an office. The contact information below is still good, but phone service will be reduced to messages.
