2019 Snoflinga Winter Festival features new events

By Robin Jordan

Downhill and cross-country skiing, ice skating, curling and fat-tire bike racing are just a few of the winter activities that will be featured during Butte's 4th Annual Snoflinga Winter Festival, which takes place Thursday through Sunday, Jan. 17-20 at various venues throughout the community.

The festival, started in 2016, was started by members of the Butte Community Fitness Foundation as a way to get people interested in exercising in the winter. Butte-Silver Bow's Parks and Recreation Department and other organizations and businesses partner in the festival as a way to show off the many recreational opportunities in the community, including the local trail system and parks.

This year's festival will again feature popular events like youth skiing and snowboarding at Foreman's Park at the Mountain Con Mine Yard, cross-country skiing at Homestake Lodge and ice skating at the High Altitude Skating Center as well as live music and vendors throughout the festival. There will be plenty of opportunities for people to try their hand at new sports, as well. All activities are free to the public, except as noted, and rental of skis, boots, snowboards, snowshoes and skates will be offered free of charge. Some events require registration and forms are available at www.snoflinga.org

For the first time this year, Snoflinga and Skijoring USA will introduce the sport of skijoring to Butte. In skijoring, a skier is pulled by a horse and rider using a 30-foot tow rope. The skier navigates a course of slalom gates and jumps and the team with the fastest time wins. Three levels of competition will be offered: Open 3D, Novice and Youth. Snowmobiles will be available to pull skiers wanting to try skijoring for the first time. Organizers expect teams from all over Montana and the northwest to compete. Spectators are welcome and food vendors will be on hand for the event, which will be held along Hanson Road, south of Montana St.

Also new this year will be the Snoflinga King and Queen Triathlon, a 3-event competition that includes the 5K run, 10K Nordic ski and fat bike race. Prizes will be awarded to the top finishers in male and female divisions.

Another new event will be "Try Hockey," a hockey demonstration and free instruction at the Community Ice Center, presented by the Butte Amateur Hockey Association.

Several other Snoflinga events are scheduled this year for the evening hours, including a Skijoring Calcutta at the Best Western Plus Butte Plaza Inn and several skiing film showings at 5518 Designs and the Covellite Theatre.

Snoflinga Winter Festival sponsors for 2019 are the Dennis and Phyllis Washington Foundation, Montana Pro Audio, Butte-Silver Bow Parks and Recreation, Copper City Crossfit, NorthWestern Energy, Butte-Silver Bow TBID, Express Care, St. James Healthcare, Homestake Lodge, Metals Sports Bar & Grill, KBOW/KOPR/Magic 97.7 Radio Stations, 5518 Designs, Montana Orthopedics, Opportunity Bank, Granite Mountain Electric, Steeles, Jeffry Contracting, A-1 Ambulance, Denny Menholt Ford, Montana Abstract & Title Co., Leskovar Honda, Triple S Building, Butte Veterinary Center, Payne West Insurance, Murdoch's, McGree Trucking, Avatar Realty, Whalen Tire and Montucky Cold Snacks.

Years ago, I heard a negative, yet very funny comment about the Butte Sports Hall of Fame.

"Everyone is born into the Butte Sports Hall of Fame," a popular guy in town said, "and you play your way out of it."

The funny comment was basically attacking the number of members in the Hall of Fame. There are too many, he says, and he is not alone in this assertion.

Before I became involved in the Hall of Fame, I thought the same thing.

When you look at the Hall of Fame shrine in the lobby of the Butte Civic Center, it seems like everybody and his brother is in. Currently, there are more than 100 living member, whom the late Pat Kearney called "Green Jackets" because of his completely original idea to present Hall of Famers with green jackets.

Even though he tried to play it

BUTTE SPORTS

No playing your way out of Butte Sports Hall of Fame

off with a sly smile, this comment, one that I happily repeated around town, really stung Kearney, who poured his heart and soul into the Butte Sports Hall of Fame.

The comment was a direct attack on the Hall of Fame that Kearney helped found and that was only possible because of the countless hours he put into it. He was the chairman of the Hall until his death in 2014.

Kearney, who was never known to shy away from a good argument, responded to the comment by inviting the gentlemen who made it to serve on the Hall of Fame's selection committee.

Kearney told me that he figured the best way to improve a great organization was to involve people who are critical of it.

The man declined Kearney's invitation, and that is too bad.

For one thing, he would have been a great addition. He's a sharp, fair-minded guy who knows the Butte sports scene and its history very well.

Even more, though, he would have seen just how wrong his funny assessment of the Butte Sports Hall of Fame actually is.

There certainly is a great many of monuments in the Civic Center lobby. In fact, one of the biggest problems we are facing in the near future is that we are running out of space.

But go ahead and walk around and look at those monuments. Read the accomplishments of the men and women Hall of Fame members. You will see that every one of them belong there.

More importantly, look at the people who are nominated for the Hall of Fame. You could make a hall of fame out of the people who have been left out of the Butte Sports Hall of Fame.

The Butte Sports Hall of Fame, which originated from a conversation involving then Butte-Silver Bow chief executive Don Peoples Sr. at a Christmas party, inducted its first class in the summer of 1987. It has inducted a class every other summer since.

In June, the Hall will enshrine its 17th class, yet the organization is still playing catch up on town with a rich sports history that goes back to the turn of the 20th Century.

The Hall of Fame will probably never get caught up, unless we induct a class of about 150 this June. Great athletes from the 1960s and 1970s seem to be particularly squeezed out.

That is because when the Hall of Fame opened its doors, they were competing against legends like Bob O'Billovich, Swede Dahlberg, Milt Popovich, Jim Sweeney, "Jumpin'" Joe Kelly, Sylvia White and Judy (Morstein) Martz, to name a few.

Nowadays, they are competing with the younger athletes, like Josh Paffhausen, Rob Johnson and, soon, Colt Anderson.

How do you vote against Johnson, who played catcher in the major leagues? How could you vote against Colt Anderson, who will be eligible once he officially retires from the NFL?

How do you vote against any of the many Butte High state champion wrestlers?

Well, how do you vote against Barry Sullivan, the quarterback of Butte High's undefeated state championship football team in 1977?

How do you vote against any member of that great 1977 team, for that matter?

The answer is because you cannot vote for everyone. When you examine the people in and out of the Hall of Fame, you will realize the problem is not that there are too many people in. It is that there are too many people deserving who are not.

The bigger problem is that many of them will likely never get in.

It is a classic catch 22 for the Hall of Fame. Damned if you do, damned if you don't.

It reminds me of the time that Sports Illustrated wrote a story documenting the 75 biggest jerks in the history of sports. Matt Vincent and I sat at Maloney's Bar to write our "Rat Chat" column for the daily newspaper, and we came up with at least 100 people we could not believe were not mentioned in the list of 75 biggest jerks.

As the executive director, I get accused of pushing for certain people to go in. It has happened quite a bit since I was unwillingly named to the job in June 2016.

My job is to make sure the selection committee has the correct information for which to make their decisions. My job is to make sure their decisions are as tough as possible.

I do not have a vote, and I do not lobby for nominees, yet I have been accused of doing so. That's OK, though. Like Kearney, I have never run away from a good argument.

I am just happy there is so much passion around the Butte Sports Hall of Fame.

Easily the best indicator that the Hall of Fame is great is how much it means for people to be in it. It means a great deal to the "Green Jackets," at it means even more to the family and friends of people who want someone enshrined.

You can go to the Hall of Fame public forum at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Metals Sports Bar & Grill and see this passion for yourself.

Last year we had the likes of Sonny Holland, Jon McElroy and Jim Street making passionate please for nominees. We had a bunch of other former players, coaches, families and friends lining up to make a pitch for someone they feel Hall of Fame worthy.

They will be there again this week making another pitch.

My hope is that there is at least person there to speak for one of the new nominees for 2019. As fate would have it, the gentleman who made "play your way out" comment has been nominated for the Hall of Fame, and he is a strong candidate.

He is a longshot for election since the field, especially for men his age, is just packed with worthy candidates.

I will not lobby for him (or any other candidate), but I would love to see him elected to the Butte Sports Hall of Fame.

Pat Kearney's sly smile will certainly be on my mind as I watch him presented with his green jacket for not playing his way out of the Butte Sports Hall of Fame.

What’s Keeping You From Protecting Your Family’s Future?

Think about your loved ones. What will their future be like? Can you picture them living in your house many years from now? Can you picture your children going to college? Can you picture your spouse or partner enjoying a comfortable retirement? These are all pleasant visions – but what if you weren’t in these pictures?

If you were no longer around, you’d leave a gaping hole in the lives of your survivors. The emotional element would be tough enough, but the financial aspect – the permanent loss of your income – could be devastating to all the hopes you’ve had for your family members. Fortunately, you can help prevent this “worst-case” scenario from happening – if you have sufficient life insurance.

Unfortunately, a lot of people don’t – even when they recognize the need. LIMRA and Life Happens, two organizations that provide education on life insurance, report the following:

Only four in 10 Americans own an individual life insurance policy – although 85% say that most people need life insurance.

More than one-third of all households report that they would feel an adverse financial impact within one month of losing a primary wage earner’s income, while nearly half would feel an impact in just six months.

What’s keeping people from providing adequate insurance for their families? Here’s a sampling of the most common reasons:

“I just don’t want to think about it.” Let’s face it – like almost everybody, you probably don’t like to think about death. And consequently, you may well be inclined to postpone thinking about life insurance. But if you can just envision what your loved ones’ lives would be like without you, in terms of their financial situation, you will find it easier to address your insurance needs in a calmer, more analytical manner.

“I have other financial priorities.” You will always have financial obligations – mortgage or rent payments, car payments, credit card bills, student loans, etc. You can’t ignore these expenses, but ask yourself this: Do any of them really take priority over the future happiness and welfare of your loved ones? Since the answer to this question is obviously “no,” you will likely conclude that maintaining adequate life insurance is one of the most important financial moves you can make.

“I can’t afford life insurance.” If you think life insurance is prohibitively expensive, you’re not alone.

In fact, 80% of consumers think life insurance costs more than it does, according to LIMRA and Life Happens, while nearly half of the “millennial” generation estimates the cost at five times more than the actual amount. In reality, some types of life insurance, such as term insurance, is highly affordable.

“I don’t know how much insurance I’ll need.” To determine an appropriate level of coverage, you’ll need to consider a variety of factors, such as the number and age of your dependents, size of your mortgage, spousal income, amount of employer-provided insurance, and so on. A financial professional can help you calculate the amount of protection you need.

As you can see, none of the reasons listed above should really keep you from adding life insurance to your overall financial strategy. So, take action soon to help ensure that your wishes for your family’s future will become reality.

New tax law could hurt non-profit charities

By Robin Jordan

We've already heard many troubling things about the 2017 Tax and Jobs Act, which was sold as a huge tax cut for the American people. Effects of the law include adding more than a trillion dollars to the national deficit in the first year. Eighty percent of the tax cut benefits go to the wealthiest 1 percent of individuals, not the middle class. And, despite huge cuts in corporate tax rates, the law's positive effect on economic growth has so far been much smaller than projected.

Here's a new troubling wrinkle: the law could severely hurt non-profits that depend on charitable contributions.

The new law increases the individual standard deduction to $12,000, up from $6,350 per person. Likewise, the standard deduction for married couples has increased to $24,000, up from $12,700 per couple. One of the main reasons to itemize deductions in the past has been to take advantage of charitable contributions made. Now, with the higher standard deduction, taxpayers have less incentive to itemize, since fewer would be able to take advantage of any tax savings—and thus have less incentive to give to charitable organizations.

In addition, the law reduces the tax rate on most income levels, which lessens the benefit to those who do still itemize.

A study by the Indiana University School of Philanthropy and Independent Sector concluded the changes will reduce charitable giving by 1.7 percent to 4.6 percent. That's an annual reduction of $4.9 to $13.1 billion given to non-profit charities. Other sources estimate losses at up to $20 billion a year.

Under the new law, fewer taxpayers will be subject to the federal estate tax. The limit for exemption has doubled from 2017. Estates worth less than $11 million per person or $22 million per married couple are exempt from the tax in 2018. One of the main reasons the wealthy make charitable bequests is to avoid the estate tax. In 2016, total bequest giving was estimated at $30.36 billion, about 8 percent of all charitable giving.

The bottom line is that the new tax law will make it even tougher for non-profits that depend on charitable contributions to survive and do their good work.

One thing about the new law's effect on charities: For most taxpayers, giving is now truly its own—and only-- reward.

Reporting to His Bosses

By George Waring

The Huffington Post's Chris D'Angelo began his account of Ryan Zinke's appearance before the National Petroleum Council in December with this attention grabber:

"The interior chief was so comfortable playing the part of an oil man he momentarily forgot he wasn't one."

It was old home week for Zinke. His audience were men leading the industry that ranked second only to "finance" as his source of the $4.6 million he spent in 2014 to buy Montana's seat in the House of Representatives.

D'Angelo noted that Zinke spoke as the head of the department responsible for "overseeing some 500 million acres of land, or one-fifth of the United States, and 1.7 billion acres on the Outer Continental Shelf." The Interior Department is charged with "the sometimes conflicting tasks of preserving and protecting public lands and waters for future generations while also setting the policies that govern extracting natural resources from them."

There was no mention of conflict by Zinke. He defined his department's "regulatory philosophy" as being a partner with industry because "you are the leading edge of technology."

Zinke noted, "I've been criticized for saying we want to work with you. I'll take the criticism." This was a reference to a speech at the Louisiana Oil and Gas Association's meeting in September, when he stated: "Our government should work for you," will be marching real close to producing 14 million barrels of oil per day." And that he agreed with Russian President Vladimir Putin that $60 per barrel is "a good spot to keep the economic engine in good shape."

The good news Zinke shared with his funders was the prediction that "within two years the U.S.

"We've gotten a lot better as industry," Zinke said, quickly correcting himself. "You've gotten a lot better." He pointed to energy producers' success with domestic shale production, noting that companies have been able to turn a profit on oil from the Bakken fields in Montana and North Dakota when prices have been at around $30 per barrel. That, he said, "shows you how good we are and efficient we are."

Zinke's speech came one week following the release of the congressionally mandated 1,600 page federal climate assessment to which the Interior Department had contributed. Its conclusion warned "that greenhouse gas emissions have put the planet on a path toward catastrophic climate change."

D'Angelo emphasized that Zinke did not "blast the report's 350 authors for basing their findings on the most extreme scenarios" which is what he and the Trump White House did on November 30th. Instead, before this industry audience, Zinke "blamed the media among other targets."

Zinke said, "The media focused on worst-case scenarios, which statistically we may not even be able to reach." Zinke then adopted a strange foreign relations metaphor.

According to Zinke, based on "observable data, climate change is more toward the peace time. It's kind of like the military. There's peace time and there's global nuclear combat. The media focused on global nuclear combat." Make sense of that comparison!

D'Angelo reported that Zinke's other target for blame was "young people."

"A lot of the millennials," Zinke said, "look at that report and they don't look at the models," instead focusing on "rising sea levels that statistically and data-wise we don't know."

At this point, D'Angelo felt compelled to correct Zinke. A Secretary of the Interior shouldn't lie. D'Angelo wrote: "In reality, scientists have been tracking sea level rise for decades using tide gauges and satellites, with observational data dating back to the late 1800s."

Then came Zinke's second Pinocchio: "Zinke boasted that the U.S. has led the charge in reducing carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases."

Zinke concluded with the truth, by confessing that his "concern" as Interior Department Secretary, is "we need to be better at emphasizing the case for American energy."

Thus far, wrote D'Angelo, Zinke has succeeded in "rolling back numerous environmental safeguards, including President Barack Obama's Clean Power Plan, a policy limiting greenhouse gas emissions from power plants." And, to his credit, he's "overturned an Obama-era moratorium on new coal leases on federal land, scrapped a hydraulic fracturing rule meant to better protect public health and rolled back an Obama-era rule limiting the amount of methane, a powerful greenhouse gas, that can be released from oil and gas operations on federal and Native American lands."

His bosses gave Zinke a standing ovation.

Mining Museum Meanderings

By Larry Hoffman

I was raised by a single mom who did her best to raise a willful child without a man in the house. I didn't do much to make her life easier, and getting hay fever around five didn't make me any easier to live with. Just before my eighth birthday we visited family friends who had a small gold mine and I found out there was no pollen underground. From there I spent all the fall in love with the darkness, the machinery, explosives, the lure of "striking it rich", but most of all the people who worked in the small mines of central Montana.

Most of these men had been born in the 1870's and 80's and had seen mining from candles to electric cap lamps, hand drilling to jackleg rock drills, and felt hats to hard hats. All were intelligent independent characters who defined hard work and dreaming. They took a brat and taught him the skills and the work ethic necessary to do the work. With the work were endless stories that connected what we were doing to everything that had ever happened in the history of mankind. I was hooked on history.

And they talked about Butte, the Richest Hill on Earth. From the time I was 10 or so, there was no doubt I was going the Montana School of Mines.

In the fall of 1964, the Orphan Girl mine stood stark and silent, closed since the fall of metals prices in 1956 and the 1959 strike. I was checking it out the second day on campus and met a group of people with the dream of making it into a mining museum. The next month I was part of a group of volunteers who went to Rogers Pass and brought back a little 3-stamp mill, one of the first exhibits.

I spent years away from Butte and the World Museum of Mining as work and life took my time and attention, but I never lost the connection and kept getting drawn back in, time after time, as a contributor, volunteer, and board member after I moved back here in 1974.

In the early 2000's a mature career and resources allowed me to dedicate serious time and effort into the growth of the museum. With the able help of Dan Bowler and others, the mine yard and exhibits got reorganized, along with a new entrance. In cooperation with Montana Tech the underground mine tour was built in 2006 and then expanded last year.

In 2017, with the support of Butte-Silver Bow, we were able to restore two hoisting engines at the Steward mine and found that the people of Butte were hungry to learn more about their heritage.

When the mines shut down in the early 1980's, Butte went into shock.

More than a century, generations, of jobs and financial security just came to a stop. The Butte Hill wasn't an economic engine anymore, it was just a wasteland.

Over the next 25 years or so, massive reclamation efforts have done cosmetic surgery to the old and scarred landscape, but also removed many of the iconic landmarks that were growing-up-in-Butte normal for thousands of people. All that was left of underground mining were the headframes and the stories told by a dwindling group of people who were part of it. The sights and sounds and energy were gone. Many don't even know what the headframes were for.

Now the people who are descended from the miners who drove 10,000 miles of tunnels as deep as a mile below the surface want to know what it was like for their fathers, grandfathers, and immigrant ancestors.

The World Museum of Mining is the link between the past and the present, with the goal of making sure future generations know why Butte and mining were, and are, important in making civilization and technology what we have today. More importantly, it is the repository and display of the humanity and heritage of all the peoples who came here from all over the world and made that impact possible.

Our museum is growing and expanding its ability to fulfill that mission. Part of that is the proposed Mining Heritage Center building to welcome visitors to the facility and properly preserve and display the collection of artifacts and facts.

I took three years off from the Museum to do what I could to get the Carousel built. Now my focus is to help get this project completed, as well as continue to improve the off-campus sites, like the Steward and restoring Christmas lights to the headframes.

It's not easy and it's not cheap but, like the Carousel, it can be done with the help of those who care.

Small Changes Big Difference

Change is difficult for just about everyone. One issue is how we set our goals, and it is a challenge to make them realistic and attainable. We all want things to happen quickly and the media, current diets and fads play to our impatience, promising remarkable change in a short amount of time, usually with minimal effort on our part. It does take effort, but making small changes is more doable than attempting to change everything at once.

A great place to start is by eating regularly. Our bodies generally require fuel every three to four hours. Start by breaking your fast and eating within an hour of waking in the morning. Then work towards eating at regular intervals for the rest of the day. Like sleep, your system will work better if you stay on schedule. Think of how many times we overeat or make poor choices because we skipped a meal or waited too long to eat.

Drink a glass of water with every meal. Not only does this contribute to good digestive health and assist in nutrient absorption, we tend to eat less when we are well hydrated. We don't always remember to drink the recommended amount of water during the day and including a glass with each meal goes a long way to remedy that situation. Plenty of water will keep your energy level high and aid in concentration.

Add a serving of greens to your day. Whether you enjoy spinach in your scrambled eggs or a small salad at lunch or dinner, the health benefits will far out weigh the effort. Greens of all kinds prevent disease and help keep you healthy. If you don't have time to prepare salads, try out a salad-in-a-bag. The prep work is done for you. If you are creative, experiment with some kale or swiss chard recipes. Add greens in a way that appeals to you.

Make it a point to eat your meals sitting down, preferably with family. If you live alone, make the effort to get together regularly with friends or family, either out or at each other's homes. Eating with family is especially good for children and has been shown to improve grades, relationships and the quality of meals. It is easy to get used to eating while watching television or looking at our phones. We all benefit from social interaction and it improves our moods, mindfulness and overall health.

Think about including whole foods in your meals. Skip foods that are labeled 'fat-free' or 'reduced-calorie'. These foods have been processed to make the labels look better, not to make them healthier. Include lean meat or poultry, whole-grains and even cheese in your meals. Think about balance and remember that fruits and vegetables are generally fat free and low in calories.

Stop ignoring your hunger. I know if I am hungry, I think it is good because I must be burning calories and I will lose weight, when in fact this does not happen. If anything, it helps me to gain. Our natural response to deprivation is excess and when our bodies think we are starving, they store calories. Instead, be prepared by keeping good snacks handy. Nuts are a great choice; they stay fresh and have been shown to improve our health.

Rather than a giant, non-specific resolution this year, like losing twenty pounds, choose something small. If one of the above suggestions is right for you, work on it till it becomes part of your routine, then decide if you wish to choose another. Or you may already be aware of something small you can work on. You will feel balanced, relaxed about food, and healthier than ever with just a few small diet changes that make a big difference! You have nothing to lose, except maybe weight!

January is Radon Awareness Month

Naturally occurring gas can be harmful, but can be mitigated

Radon is a colorless, odorless, tasteless radioactive gas that comes from the natural breakdown of uranium, a natural element in rocks, soil and water. Radon can enter and accumulate in your home, posing a hazard to your health by damaging your lungs. Radon is the second leading cause of lung cancer behind smoking and secondhand smoke.

Testing for radon and acting to reduce radon levels in your home could save your life and the lives of your family. There are many radon testing devices available for sale at your local hardware store, online, county health offices, radon professionals, Kansas State University's National Radon Program, and the Montana Department of Environmental Quality Radon Control Program. The devices are easy to deploy and provide accurate results for the homeowner.

Radon is measured in pico-curies per liter (pCi/L) of air. The Environmental Protection Agency identifies 4.0 pCi/L as the "action level" for radon, meaning you should start investigating the possibility of lowering elevated radon levels via mitigation or ventilation. Studies indicate almost half of the homes tested for radon in Montana have radon levels that exceed the action level.

Radon can accumulate to unhealthy levels, especially during colder months when windows and doors are kept closed. Ventilating, or mitigating, radon gas from under the basement floor or crawl-space is a common approach to lowering radon levels and can cost $500 to $2,000 to address, depending on the degree of mitigation needed.

If you are building a new home, consider installing the preliminary parts of a radon system including a sub-slab gravel layer, plastic sheeting, vent pipe, and electrical box. Incorporating a radon mitigation system into home construction can save money and lives.

If it comes to mitigating high radon levels, you can do it yourself if you're up to the challenge. Many homeowners hire a certified radon mitigator to install ventilation systems. Be sure to obtain bids from more than one mitigator, check their insurance coverage, and call their references before entering into a contract with a selected mitigator. ## What's Cooking

Meat Roll
By Debbie Sorensen

There are many jokes that abound concerning meat loaf. In my opinion, the bottom line is this; meat loaf is a meal that is satisfying. It can be simple or elegant as well as economical. We can mix it and shape it to fit the tastes and desires of those we are serving. Or we can add some twists and ingredients that create interesting conversation at our dinner table.

As a former Home Economics teacher, I was asked to judge food contests of many types. It was always a delight to me, to see what would be presented and by whom. Working with high school students was especially satisfying to me. Watching the individuals at work and observing their special touches was such a window into their personalities. The results were always amazing, tasty and quite interesting.

Typically, I would end up with the recipes. I have enjoyed using and reflecting over those creations as time has gone by. Today's recipe is a first-place winner from a Cowbells' High School Beef Cook-Off and was prepared by Dannette Ness of Whitehall.

Sicilian Meat Roll

|--|---|
| 2 beaten eggs                                    | ½ c. tomato juice                       |
| 1 clove garlic, minced (or 1 tsp. garlic powder) |   |
| ½ c. tomato juice                                | 2 lb. ground beef                       |
| ¾ c. soft bread crumbs                           | 4-6 oz. thinly sliced ham               |
| 2 T. snipped parsley                             | 1 (6 oz.) pkg. sliced Mozzarella cheese |
| ¼ tsp. salt                                      | ¼ tsp. pepper                           |
| ½ tsp. dried oregano                             |   |

In bowl, combine the eggs and tomato juice. Stir in bread crumbs, parsley, oregano, salt, pepper and garlic. Add ground beef, mix well. On waxed paper or foil, pat meat into a 10"x8" rectangle. Arrange ham slices on top of meat, leaving a small margin around edges.

Reserve 1 slice cheese. Tear up remaining cheese. Sprinkle over ham. Starting from short end, carefully roll up meat, using paper to lift. Seal edges and ends. Place roll, seam side down, in 13"x9"x2" baking pan.

Bake at 350° until done, about 1 ¼ hrs. (Center of roll will be pink due to the ham.) Cut reserved cheese slice into 4 triangles; overlap atop meat. Return to oven until cheese melts, about 2 minutes. Makes 8 servings.

"We must guard against being fooled by false slogans, such as 'right to work.' It is a law to rob us of our civil rights and job rights. Its purpose is to destroy labor Unions and the freedom of collective bargaining by which Unions have improved wages and working conditions of everyone... Wherever these laws have been passed, wages are lower, job opportunities are fewer and there are no civil rights."

The IWW-organized "Bread & Roses" textile strike of 32,000 women and children begins in Lawrence, Mass. IWW leaders Bill Haywood and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn help lead the strike. It lasted 10 weeks and ended in victory. The legislature cut maximum working hours for women and children from 56 to 54 hours per week and the employers had cut their pay along with the hours. The first mill-workers to walk out were Polish women, who, upon collecting their pay, exclaimed that they had been cheated and promptly abandoned their looms. Many were forced to send their children to live with supporters living in New York during the strike. -1912

Nearly two weeks into a sit-down strike at GM's Fisher Body Plant No. 2 in Flint, Mich., workers battle police when they try to prevent the strikers from receiving food deliveries from thousands of supporters on the outside. 16 strikers and 11 police were injured. Last pheasant hunt of the season

By Paul Vang

The clock is ticking, and it's not just for the brand new baby we call 2019.

The upland bird season ended a week ago, on New Year's Day. I stayed home and tried to stay warm on that subzero day. I did get out for one last pheasant outing a few days earlier, however. I guess if I had someone filming my life, as it seems all klutzy people do, posting the results on Facebook, the day might end up in some series of outtakes from the life of an unlucky pheasant hunter.

I'd object, as the day was more about how smart and wary pheasants are in the middle of winter. These are birds that have honed their senses and survival skills to a fine edge.

A few glimpses into the outing might indicate how my day went. Just before I turned off the gravel road to drive into the ranch I was hunting, I spotted a rooster pheasant in the middle of the road about 20 yards ahead of my truck. While I was watching this pheasant, another rooster flushed from a Russian olive tree on the side of the road and flew into a sagebrush patch in the field I was going to hunt.

I parked the truck and quietly got out and then let Kiri, my Labrador retriever out and we approached the brush patch. There were pheasant tracks everywhere. We got perhaps 20 yards into the brush when cock pheasants began flushing out of range.

It occurred to me that these pheasants must have watched some old W. C. Fields movies on some hidden TV set back in the brush jungles. "Never give a sucker an even break," was one of Fields' favorite lines, using it in several movies, including his last starring movie in 1941, when that line was the movie title.

During the course of our walk through brush patches, cat-tails, sagebrush and willows, we put up more pheasants, again all out of range. We finally got to a grassy swale where half a dozen pheasants got up in good shooting range one at a time. The only problem was that they were all hens.

The sun was beginning to slip behind the mountains to the west when four rooster pheasants flushed from around 100 yards ahead of us, flying to a cattail patch another 100 or so yards ahead. When Kiri and I got there, the birds were gone, having slipped off to parts unknown.

I saw a pheasant fly into tall grass not too far away, but when we got there it was gone—not even a hint of scent that might have gotten Kiri excited. Yes, never give a sucker an even break.

We were in the shadow of the mountains, with temperatures dropping, when we completed our walk, and, for all intents and purposes, the 2018 upland bird season.

As I noted in last week's column, this hadn't been a particularly productive season in terms of potential dinners in the freezer. Still, as I look back to the annual trek through the seasons from late summer to autumn and, finally, winter, I feel good about it.

My birthday falls in October, usually in the first week or so of pheasant season, so I have annual reminders that I'd better enjoy this hunting season, because it's a good question how many seasons I have left.

So, I feel good that I'm still hiking the aspen thickets in the mountains, and the prairies of Montana and North Dakota. I'm still thrilled and startled by the flush of a grouse or pheasant. I enjoy the sight of a Labrador retriever working out the scent of a game bird.

When you read this I will be looking at one more, final, outing for some mallards, though there are never guarantees for success. Nevertheless it's personally important to be out there, trudging across that frozen tundra before the seasons are all done.

It's a long time until September.

New report highlights the importance of Montana Treatment Courts, unmet need

According to a new report released last week, more than 1,600 Montanans would benefit from treatment courts each year, but due to limited funding and capacity, there are only 28 state treatment courts serving about 550 participants at present. In addition to state treatment courts, there are eight tribal drug courts (Healing to Wellness Courts) serving Montana's American Indian tribes. The analysis recommends additional state investments to expand existing programs and support new treatment courts as a cost-effective way to improve criminal justice and health outcomes. This report was commissioned by the Montana Healthcare Foundation and conducted by NPC Research. "Treatment courts are the most researched and effective criminal justice intervention we have for defendants with substance use disorders," said Beth McLaughlin, the Montana Supreme Court Administrator. "However, many people in Montana that need these services still do not have access to them."

Treatment courts reduce recidivism by providing access to drug and alcohol treatment for offenders with substance use disorders. Participants must remain law-abiding, engage in the workforce through employment or job training, and pay outstanding restitution and fees. The analysis notes that treatment courts often cost less than processing offenders through the regular criminal justice system. Treatment courts can thus reduce the burden on taxpayers by achieving better outcomes for offenders, and by reducing incarcerations, re-incarcerations, and the number of people under criminal justice system supervision. "Most drug court participants receive drug and alcohol treatment through Montana's Medicaid Expansion," said Dr. Aaron Wernham, CEO of the Montana Healthcare Foundation. "The success of these programs depends on partnerships between the courts and high-quality treatment programs, so continuing Medicaid expansion is essential to the success of treatment courts in Montana." Montana's treatment courts are currently funded in part by an annual allocation of $13 million in state tax dollars and competitive, time-limited federal grants. Tribal Healing to Wellness Courts are currently funded mainly by tribes. In order to expand access to these services, the report's recommendations include increasing the general fund allocation, identifying alternative funding streams, and reinstating Medicaid funds for treatment services. To read the full report and recommendations, please visit: <https://mthcf.org/resources/treatment-courts-report/>.

More information about Montana's treatment courts is available at: <https://courts.mt.gov/courts/drug-courts>.
