Council denies Ramsay residents' request for interim zoning

By Robin Jordan

Butte-Silver Bow's council of commissioners voted last week to deny a request by Ramsay residents to schedule a public hearing to consider imposing interim zoning regulations they say are needed to protect the health and safety of the community from effects of unregulated development, but that representatives of a company that wants to build a truck stop in the area say are not warranted under Montana law and that their enactment could bring on "serious consequences" for the city-county government.

Love's Travel Stops & Country Stores, an Oklahoma-based company with more than 450 stores in 41 states, first announced in January 2017 that it planned to build a truck stop east of Ramsay. The latest plans for the truck stop include a 13,000 square foot building that will include a convenience store, 24-hour tire service facility and space for two food franchises and a lot on the eastern side of the property with about 100 spaces for truck parking. The truck stop will create about 60 jobs locally that will pay above minimum wage, including several management positions.

Since Love's first announced its proposal, Ramsay residents have been vocal in their opposition to the truck stop, claiming it would bring noise, light and air pollution, increase in crime and traffic problems in the community and would lower the value of their homes.

Originally, Love's planned to locate the truck stop on a parcel of open land just east of Palmer Street, the eastern boundary of the town of Ramsay. Part of that site was in a residential zone and would have required a variance from Butte-Silver Bow's zoning board. The company then proposed a site approximately 500 feet to the east, part of which is in a commercial zone and part of which is un-zoned, thus not subject to any zoning regulations.

At last week's council meeting, Steve Walsh, a project manager for Love's, told commissioners the company is in the process of finalizing permits needed for the truck stop with state and local agencies and hopes to begin construction of the truck stop this summer. He said the location was not chosen by accident, but in response to the need for more safe truck parking and trucker facilities because of changing laws requiring truckers to get more hours of rest.

Walsh said he understands the neighbors' safety concerns, but he opposes interim zoning. Love's is a family business that takes pride in the safety of its facilities, he said. The parking areas will be fenced and well lit, the truck refueling area will be east of the building and trees will be planted along the side of the business facing Palmer St. to mitigate lights. Employees from the 24-hour truck-service business will walk the lot to pick up trash and check on trucks as part of the company's safety procedures.

A Missoula attorney for Love's, Bill VanCanagan, said he co-authored a revision of the state's interim zoning laws while serving in the Montana legislature because the statutes were being misused to shut down legitimate development. He said the revisions were a collaborative effort by developers and government.

VanCanagan said interim zoning laws only apply if there is an immediate, imminent emergency. Under emergency zoning procedures, he said, the local government would first have to identify the emergency, after which it would have 30 days to conduct a study to find if the emergency exists, identify options to mitigate the emergency and then take action.

VanCanagan said neighbors' opposition to the development does not equate to an emergency and that no facts have been given to confirm that there is an emergency. Enacting emergency zoning would affect other area property owners, he said, not just Love's, and it could have "serious consequences" for the local government if it infringes on private property rights.

Several Ramsay-area landowners told

Years ago, a friend of mine described the first time he ever volunteered for the Special Olympics.

He was working the gymnastics event at the old Sherman School in Walkerville, and a young girl started her routine on the balance beam, which was only a few inches off the ground.

One look at the determination of this girl got to my friend in a big way.

"I started balling," he said.

I couldn't even make fun of how easily a grown man could be brought to tears – or how he could talk about his crying while sitting on a barstool at Maloney's Bar – because I could see the passion in his eyes as he talked about the Special Olympics. My eyes even started to tear up a little bit as he described the scene.

"Right then I said, 'Son of a

BUTTE SPORTS

Help me raise money for the Special Olympics gun," he told me. "You've got me for life."

No matter his level of involvement each year, my friend will always hold the Special Olympics and the Special Olympians close to his heart, and why wouldn't he?

Really, there is nothing in life more beautiful than the Special Olympics and the athletes who compete.

You will not see them showing up their opponent. They will not get busted for performance-enhancing drugs. They will never cheat. They are true champions of sportsmanship all the way.

In a way, there represent everything sports should be.

If you don't believe me, take legendary football coach Gene Stallings' word for it. Stallings' son Johnny was born with Down syndrome in 1962. Johnny died at the age of 46 nearly 10 years ago.

"The two saddest days of my life were when he was born and when he died," Stallings told cnsnews.com after Johnny's death. "When he was born, I was devastated, and when he died, I was even more devastated."

When his son was born, Stallings didn't understand the beauty of his special son. It didn't take him long to see the light, however.

"Johnny was 46 years old and didn't know a bad word," Stallings said. "He saw the good in everyone. He loved going to church on Sundays and Wednesdays, and he remembered everyone's name.

"When we got to church, there would be 20 women lined up to give him a hug."

About 25 years ago, I saw an interview on ESPN by another football coach who had a son with Down syndrome. I always thought it was Bobby Bowden, the legendary leader at Florida State, but I can't find any information to back that up.

I remember what the coach said, though. He was talking about how his son had a football signed by Deion Sanders, a former FSU player who went on to be a Hall of Fame cornerback in the NFL.

This boy loved the football. He took it with him everywhere he went. He took it to school. He slept with the ball wrapped up in his arms.

One day, the boy had a friend over his house, and that boy said how much he liked the football.

Without batting an eye, the special boy extended his arms to give the football to his friend. He didn't let him borrow it or hold it for a minute. He gave it to his friend.

The coach said his son was an example of a person who was 100 percent innocent, and he is right.

Not many people have a heart that big. Special Olympians do.

So many Special Olympians are just like that boy and like Johnny Stallings. They get to go through life full of love and without the burden of hate.

My friend and former Blaine Mustang speed skating teammate Amie Opie is like that. She rode her bike to a world championship at the Special Olympics World Games in Los Angeles in 2015.

I brag about Amie's title more than I brag about the Red Sox winning a World Series.

Whenever we go to Safeway, I check to see if Amie is working at the counter in the deli. If she is, I take my kids over so they can get a fist bump from a world champion.

Unlike my crying friend, though, I have never been a volunteer during the Special Olympics. I have donated money and I buy the raffle tickets every year. I have encouraged athletes and written about them.

But I have never been involved directly in the Special Olympics. Until now.

On Wednesday, I will be running in the Law Enforcement Torch Run for Special Olympics Montana.

My good friend Eddie Walker invited me to be part of the relay team escorting the torch from Three Forks to Butte. Eddie is running 13 miles. I will be running as far as Eddie tells me to run.

It will be one of those rare opportunities in life when I get to run in front of a cop car and not get in trouble for it.

The goal of the Torch Run is to raise money and awareness of the Special Olympics movement worldwide, and you cannot find a better cause. The smiles on the athletes will tell you that.

It really is an honor to be part of something as great as the Special Olympics, and you can join me in the run. No, you don't have run from Three Forks to Butte, which is pretty much all up hill, by the way.

You can join the team with your checkbook or with just a few clicks of your mouse. You don't have to give a ton – though you are certainly welcome too. A couple of bucks can certainly go a long way for such a great cause.

You can donate online at firstgiving.com/fundraiser/bill-foley/Torch-Run-2018. You can also send a check made out to Special Olympics Montana to me at 660 Dewey Blvd, Butte, MT, 59701.

You can still give even if you don't like me, and for some reason there is a rather large group of people who fall under that classification. I don't know why. They must be Yankees fans.

If that is the case, donate in honor of Eddie. Not only does she run for the Olympians every year, she is heavily involved in the Special Olympics. She is usually the one calling to tell me how well our local athletes are doing each year so they can get some much-deserved publicity.

If you don't like Eddie, well, then there is something really wrong with you. But if you don't, there is yet another reason to make a donation.

Do it in honor of my crying friend.

Hard not to feel for Ramsay residents

By Robin Jordan

Residents of Ramsay were dealt a crushing blow last week in their battle to prevent Love's Truck Stops from building a truck stop and tire center just east of the small community as Butte-Silver Bow commissioners denied their request for a public hearing on imposing interim zoning for the area.

More than a year ago, Love's Truck Stops & Country Stores, a national firm with more than 450 stores in 41 states announced plans to build their facility just east of Palmer St., the north-south road on the east border of Ramsay. The company changed its site plan, moving the proposed facility further east to land that is partially zoned for commercial use and partially unzoned to mitigate the neighbor's concerns, but Ramsay residents have remained opposed to the project.

Residents still say that increased traffic in the area will be a safety hazard for residents, especially children, and the truck stop will cause noise, air and light pollution, bring more crime to the community and lower their property values.

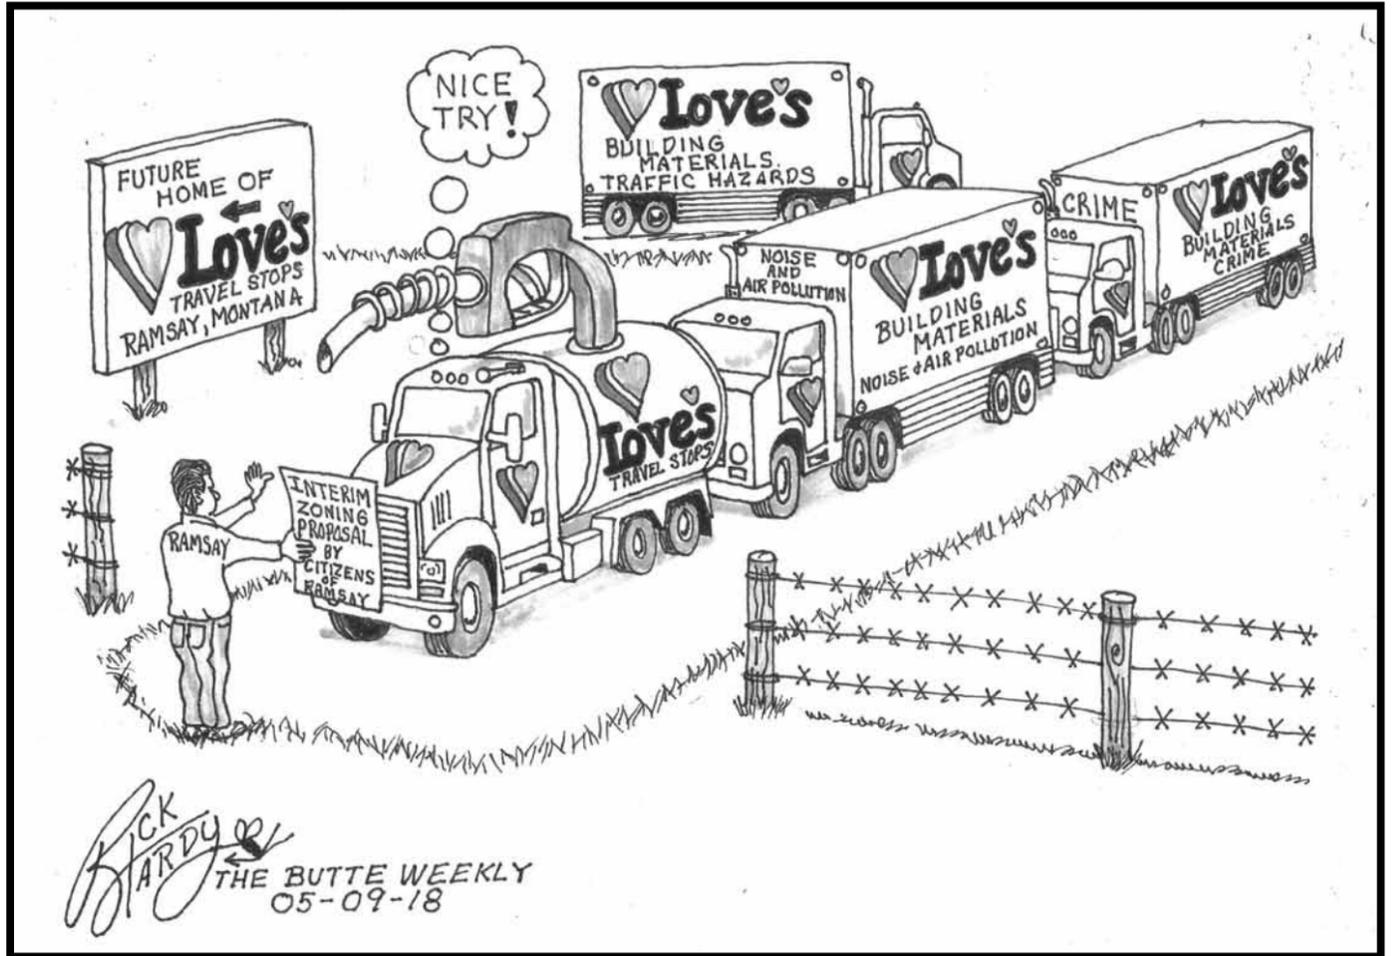

At last week's council of commissioners meeting, a project manager for Love's and an attorney for the company spoke against interim zoning, saying Montana law only allows a local government body to apply it if an emergency exists. Several landowners from the Ramsay area also stated their opposition, saying it could interfere with development on their land.

Jim Ayres, who spoke to the council on behalf of the Ramsay residents, said they were "out-gunned" at the meeting and only wanted a public hearing so that the residents could make their case that their concerns do constitute an emergency.

You have to feel some sympathy for the Ramsay residents, who feel the truck stop will change the character of their small, rural community. However, commissioners had a tough decision to make as well. It's hard to make the case that the potential problems the truck stop could cause would constitute an emergency under the law. The city-county could find itself in the middle of lawsuits if the interim zoning interfered with the property rights of area landowners.

The residents could still ask the council to schedule a presentation so that they could air their views publicly on why they think the truck stop shouldn't be built, and we hear they may do that. We doubt that it will change the council's decision on interim zoning, though.

It sounds like Love's is trying to be a good neighbor and the company has already made some major changes in its plans to mitigate the truck stop's effects on the community. It's also hard to argue against a development that will bring a substantial number of jobs to the area and benefit the tax base of the community and help the local school.

We hope all involved can agree to some compromises and find a way to get along.

A Springtime Review of Inequality

By George Waring

With Republicans bragging about a full employment economy and a great tax reform that put money in every worker's pocket, it's time to retreat from the daily horrors presented by our oligarchic political system and present a springtime overview of growing American inequality.

Faulty though it may be, it's what our government provides us: the latest Congressional Budget Office report on household income.

Sam Pizzigatti at Inequality.org reminds us that it was not until the mid-1980s that Congressional Budget researchers, prodded into action by liberal Democrats, began to trace "America's increasing concentration of income and wealth." They were asked to provide answers to questions raised within a congressional debate concerning the disastrous social impacts of Reagan's economic policies. Liberals were maintaining that our society was becoming more unequal, and of great importance to Reagan's base, that the middle class was shrinking. Reagan's defenders, Milton Friedman's deregulation driven, free market economists, cried falsehood. They accused liberal Democrats of ignoring the extent of government welfare programs. Conservatives claimed that the addition of the income provided by federal safety-net programs more than compensated for the Federal Reserve's "tight money" policy causing a recession and wage losses. Not to mention Reagan's war on labor unions.

The Congressional Budget Office began producing periodic reports that took all sources of income into account, everything from wages and salaries to food stamps and unemployment benefits. They totaled up all these numbers, by income level, before and after taxes.

Surprise. The statisticians at the CBO discovered "plenty of growing inequality." The great era of a growing middle class that began in World War II had ended as early as the Nixon administration.

Pizzigatti reports that this year's CBO household income survey covers the changes in income inequality dating back to 1979 and ending in 2014.

The good news first. 2014 was a good middle class year. Obama's Affordable Care Act was almost fully in effect. It both increased health benefits for lower-income Americans and increased federal taxes on higher-income Americans. However, Pizzigatti writes, these two pro-equality reforms weren't enough "to reverse rising inequality."

After totaling all varieties of income and government benefits, and then subtracting federal taxes, the CBO researchers found that the poorest fifth of households had an average income of $31,100 in 2014. Households in the top 1 percent averaged $1,178,600.

What kept this gap from being much wider was "means-tested transfers," the cash and in-kind services lower-income households receive from programs like Medicaid. In 2014, the federal programs accounted for a full two-thirds of the income of the poorest fifth of families.

So, even in 2014, "the divide between America's rich and everyone else continued to widen, as it had every year all the way back to 1979."

Between 1979 and 2014, middle class households saw their incomes increase by an average of $9 per week. The top 1% had incomes increasing by an average of $450 every week, a rate that was 50 times more than the middle class. And 64 times more than the $7 dollars per week that average households in the nation's poorest 20 percent gained.

Pizzigatti noted that the minor movement toward economic equality under Obama was ended by Trump. Tax rates on the wealthy have been cut and the Republican budgets have reduced support for basic social benefits.

Yes, middle- and low-income households saw a tax reform that gave them a few extra dollars per week. However, "their schools have become more overcrowded, their streets more potholed, and their college costs much more expensive as tax giveaways to the rich and powerful shrink the budgets for basic public services."

Income inequality can't match wealth inequality. According to Inequality.org:

"In 1982, the 'poorest' American listed on the first annual Forbes magazine list of America's richest 400 individuals had a net worth of $80 million. The average member of that first Forbes 400 list had a net worth of $230 million. In 2016, rich Americans needed a net worth of $1.7 billion to enter the elite Forbes 400, and the average member held a net worth of $6.0 billion, over ten times the 1982 average after adjusting for inflation."

The Institute for Policy Studies used Forbes' list last year to announce that Bill Gates, Warren Buffett and Jeff Bezos collectively hold more wealth than the bottom half of our population, 160 million people. Roughly a fifth of us "have zero or negative net worth."

Oligarchy, anyone?

Butte Farmers Market returns May 19

The Butte's Farmers' Market will return for the 2018 season in two weeks on Saturday, May 19 from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. on West Park Street between Main and Dakota Streets in Uptown Butte. The market will run every Saturday for 21 weeks through the summer until October 6.

The open air craft and fresh produce market has been a fixture of summer in Uptown Butte since 1995 when it was started by the Butte Uptown Association. That group's successor, Mainstreet Uptown Butte, will again coordinate the popular outdoor market, assisting vendors to get set up to sell their fresh food and handmade and Montana made products. The market will feature a lively mix of fresh produce, cut flowers and products from Southwest Montana crafters.

Mainstreet will also be on site throughout the Saturday market to answer questions by customers about where to find what they are looking for in the crowded market and for information about businesses throughout the district.

"New this year, the new parking garage that has been under construction for almost two years on West Park will be available as an asset for the vendors and shoppers at the Market," said George Everett, Mainstreet Uptown Butte's Executive Director. "Level 1 will be available for vendors and customers and parking everywhere Uptown on Saturdays is free of charge."

The long-running Butte Farmers' Market has grown steadily over the last few years and has a well-deserved reputation as a lively Saturday gathering place that provides customers with colorful and hardy bedding plants, farm fresh eggs, chickens, fruits and vegetables from Hmong-American vegetable gardens in Missoula, Hutterite fields near Choteau and from several truck gardens and nurseries in the Butte area.

The market continues to grow each year hosting a growing number of vendors, reflecting a national trend that highlights fresh local food being brought from the farm to the table through the local farmers' market. A variety of art and crafts by artisans and vendors from throughout Southwest Montana will be available, too.

For details about rates and rules for being a vendor or for what you can expect to find as a customer at this year's Farmers Market, visit Mainstreet Uptown Butte's web site at mainstreetbutte.org/fmarket.htm, or on Facebook at facebook.com/ButteFM.

Here's a Checklist for Changing Jobs

A few generations ago, it was not uncommon for workers to stick with a single job for their whole careers. But for many of us today, frequent job changes are a fact of life: The average employee tenure is just over four years, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. So, assuming you're going to switch jobs a few times, you'll want to be prepared. Here's a checklist of things you can do to smooth these transitions and help your financial situation:

- Build an emergency fund. Some of your job changes may be involuntary, so you'll want to have a cash cushion handy – just in case. One smart move would be to build an emergency fund, containing three to six months' worth of living expenses, with the money kept in a liquid, low-risk account.
- Consider your options for your former employer's 401(k) plan. If you had a 401(k) plan with your former employer, you have three main options: You could leave your money in the plan, if the employer allows it; you could move the money into your new employer's plan, if permitted; or you could roll the funds over to an IRA. You'll want to weigh the "pros" and "cons" of these - choices carefully before making a decision.

- Choose investments from your new retirement plan. If your new employer offers a 401(k) or similar plan, you'll need to choose the investments within the plan that are most appropriate for your goals, risk tolerance and time horizon. Contribute as much as you can afford to the plan, and consider increasing your contributions every time your salary goes up.
- Make sure you've got health insurance. The health insurance offered by your new employer may not begin the minute you start your job. Given the high costs of medical care, you'll need to make sure you are protected until your coverage kicks in. So, for that interim period, you may need to consider the federal health insurance marketplace, COBRA continuation coverage or private medical insurance. You might also be eligible to be covered under your spouse's health insurance. And you may want to learn what your options are for health savings accounts (HSAs), if available.
- Review your new benefits package – and take steps to fill gaps. Your

- new benefits package may include life and disability insurance, but these group policies may not be enough to fully protect you and your family. A financial professional can help you quantify your protection and insurance needs and offer guidance on how much coverage you may require.
- Understand your income tax considerations. Getting a new job may involve income tax implications, such as changes in your tax bracket, severance pay, unused vacation and unemployment compensation. And if you are thinking of exercising stock options, be aware that this, too, can be a taxable event. Finally, if you have to move to take a new job, you may incur some relocation and job hunting expenses that could be deductible. You will need to discuss all these issues with your tax professional.

Starting a new job can be exciting – and challenging. But you may be able to make your life easier by putting the above suggestions to work.

Let's Resolve our Conflicts person's feelings. Some of us grew up in households where conflicts were not openly addressed. For these and other reasons, we may grow up not knowing how to effectively resolve conflicts, which can lead to a refusal or inability to address them when they arise. If someone you know has unresolved conflicts, you can help them to understand how important it is not to leave them that way. You can then take the positive approach in working with that person to learn an effective process.

A pause before reacting when a conflict arises is a useful tool. It gives you a moment to keep from reacting in a negative way, or even from reacting at all. If it is a very emotional conflict, it can give you the chance to realize you need time. You can say that you want to talk about it, but you need to think first. It is also possible to request a break if things get heated. You can agree on a time to continue the discussion when both parties have had time to cool down.

Rather than accusing or blaming during the conversation, express your feelings first. One technique our counselor has shared in Lifestyle Classes is to say "I feel (state the feeling) when you (state the behavior). I need you to (state the behavior you desire)." For example, I feel disrespected when you make household decisions without discussing them with me first. I need you to discuss these things with me before the decision is made. If you are clear about your feelings and your needs, this can be very effective.

It can also be useful to involve another party. Sometimes a conflict with a co-worker is on-going and if the two of you have been unable to find an effective solution, you could request a meeting with a supervisor present. This can also work in families where a parent or family member being present can to resolve a conflict. In serious conflicts, especially with couples, involving a professional counselor can be the best solution.

Remember, it is good to resolve the conflicts in our lives, but not necessarily in the heat of the moment. Select a time when you are alone with the person and you will have time to work out your differences. Fight fair and focus on your feelings and needs rather than what you feel the other person is doing wrong. Making up is worthwhile and usually the best part!

commissioners they also opposed interim zoning.

Jim Ayres, who spoke on behalf of the Ramsay residents, said they only wanted commissioners to schedule a public hearing to discuss the possibility of interim zoning and so that the residents could "have their say."

"Boy, are we outgunned tonight," he said.

Commissioners discussed the matter at length, often consulting County Attorney Eileen Joyce, on whether they could hold a public hearing without delving further into the interim zoning process.

Commissioner Cindi Shaw called the debate "agonizing," saying none of the commissioners are lawyers.

"We're not even sure if a public hearing is legal," she said.

Commissioners eventually voted 7-5 to deny the motion to schedule a public hearing. Commissioners Brendan McDonnough, Sheryl Ralph, Bud Walker, Jim Fisher, John Morgan and Dan Foley voted to deny the motion and Commissioners Shaw, Bill Andersen, Dan Callahan, Dan Olsen and John Sorich voting against it.

Whether you're a friend, relative, military buddy, co-worker, supervisor, teacher, coach, or spiritual leader, you're likely to have an idea of how the veteran's life has been affected by military service. The traumatic experiences in the military can bring about profound changes; especially when PTSD or another inverted syndrome is present. The following story is not unique to those veterans that Wayne has helped, at no charge and often at his own cost.

My nephew is an Afghanistan veteran who returned to Montana after two tours and was suffering from PTSD. He made some mistakes and was arrested. The attorney in Missoula did not help and pled him guilty. We contacted Wayne. Right away, Wayne's support for vets was there and I could tell he genuinely cared what happened to my nephew. He got my nephew into Vets Court in Missoula and traveled back and forth from Butte to Missoula for over 6 hearings on his own dime. He was able to get the charge reduced and helped my nephew get his life back on track to return to a stable and productive life. Wayne was there every step and every moment my nephew needed him. When others wouldn't listen, he was there for him and never turned his back or gave up on him. My family cannot thank him enough.

Please give your support and vote for Wayne Harper for District Court Judge. He has represented both sides of the court on the prosecutor and defender sides of the law. He is the only candidate who has practiced in the Veterans' Courts in Missoula and Bozeman. He has the skills, knowledge and experience that is necessary to be a fair, non-discriminatory district judge. He will be there for all and deserves our support.

What's Cooking

Rhubarb Torte

By Debbie Sorensen

Even as I am writing about rhubarb recipes, I'm struggling with just a touch of "rhubarb remorse." I'm digging up half of the rhubarb in the garden and composting it! That's right. Chopping the pieces up and putting it in the compost bin. Whew.

I'm so thankful to have the pie plant to be cooking and baking with, but I have to say, by the end of last summer, I had had it. You know the drill, one square foot of early rhubarb exploded into the "unstoppable monster." Even with trimming, the leaves managed to overtake about a 3'x8' plot of our very limited garden space.

Ok, now I'm over it, basically. I think. This recipe was brought to my kitchen by a delightful neighbor near Gakona, Alaska. I still have warm memories of sharing this with her and other friends from the area.

Rhubarb Torte

Crust:

1 c. flour 2 T. sugar ¼ c. butter

Filling:

3 egg yolks 2 T. flour 1 ½ c. sugar
½ c. cream 3 c. diced rhubarb

Meringue:

3 egg whites 2 T. sugar ¼ tsp. salt

Mix ingredients for crust and pat into a 9-inch square pan. Bake at 350° for 15 minutes.

Beat egg yolks and add cream, flour and sugar for filling. Pour boiling water over rhubarb; let stand five minutes and drain. Place rhubarb on crust and pour filling mixture over it. Bake for 35 minutes. Make meringue by beating egg whites, adding sugar and salt gradually. Beat until stiff, but not dry. Spread on top of baked torte and return to oven until browned.

The Great Outdoors

Bear management continues to be a hot-button issue

By Paul Vang

The Night of the Grizzlies marked a turning point in the National Park System, as well as in the lives of a couple young Park rangers.

The Night of the Grizzlies happened just over fifty years ago, on August 13, 1967. It was a night when most Park officials were worried about forest fire risk, but not bear problems. During the middle of the night, the unthinkable happened.

In separate incidents that just happened to coincide on that fateful night, a bear went into a campground at the Granite Park Chalet and attacked Julie Helgeson, a young woman from Minnesota, dragging her off into the darkness. That same night, another bear went into the Trout Lake campground and attacked campers. A few people managed to get away from the bear, though Michele Koon, a 19-year old woman, wasn't able to unzip her sleeping back and the grizzly carried her off. Both women died from the injuries they sustained.

Two 20-something Park Rangers, Bert Gildart and Dave Shea, were called to deal with the emergencies, though it was too late to save the young women.

Gildart, who later became a well-known outdoor writer and photographer, and Shea, were speakers at the annual conference of the Northwest Outdoor Writers Association held in Choteau, Montana, in late April. A central part of their presentation was how the Night of the Grizzlies changed bear management policies in not only Glacier National Park, but the whole Park system.

Until that fateful night, grizzly bears were treated as entertainment. At Granite Park, garbage was left out in a nearby area where tourists could watch bears come in to feed on the free food. At Trout Lake, Gildart recalled, "It was a mess. There was garbage everywhere."

Gildart had the duty to search out and kill the Trout Lake bear. He found the bear, which he described as "emaciated," and had broken glass imbedded in its mouth, proving it had been eating garbage. A necropsy proved the bear was the killer, as it had blonde hair in its stomach.

Shea, who became the Park's first bear biologist, spoke of an immediate and radical change in nationwide Park bear management. It ended feeding of bears, instituted a strict pack in-pack out policy, and changed campground and backcountry camping policies. In addition, the Park Service began an aggressive education program on bear management.

Since then, there has been just one bear mauling in Glacier National Park, and that was when a biker accidentally ran into a bear, and the bear retaliated in self-defense.

Both Gildart and Shea lament the tremendous increases in Park visitation. Back in 1967, there were around 150,000 Park visitors annually. Now, that number is over 3 million, and the sheer numbers of people are overwhelming the wilderness aspect of Glacier.

Mike Madel, Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks grizzly bear specialist, has been working on bear management issues along the Rocky Mountain Front for 40 years. He relates that in the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem (NCDE), there were about 370 bears in 1970. There are now over 1200, and populations are still growing.

As bear populations increase, bears are moving onto the plains, usually following river bottoms. FWP does a lot of bear monitoring and a number of bears wear radio collars, providing almost minute-by-minute information about bear movements.

Some bears have roamed to areas east of I-15, even to the outskirts of Great Falls. Madel expects that within a few years there will likely be grizzlies in the C.M. Russell National Wildlife Refuge along the Fort Peck Reservoir.

A lot of Madel's work involves working with farmers and ranchers, helping them protect livestock and property from bear depredations. Electric fencing around bee yards and livestock corrals has been proven to be an effective deterrent.

As grizzly bears continue to increase in numbers and re-colonize ancient habitats, bear management will continue to be a hot button issue in Montana.

Finally, I'd like to wish all wives, especially mine, and mothers a Happy Mother's Day holiday weekend. Please be patient when your children serve you breakfast in bed.

This Week In Labor History

"Only a fool would try to deprive working men and women of the right to join the Union of their choice."

-Dwight D. Eisenhower, Progressive Republican President

Wednesday, May 9:

Longshoremen's Union strike leads to 4 day General strike in San Francisco. Longshoremen walked off the job at ports up and down the West Coast, soon to be followed by sailors. Many strikers were shot and killed by the bosses' goons. The IWW spent the 20's attempting to organize the dockworkers, although their efforts were crushed, syndicalist thinking and militant Unionism remained extremely popular on the docks as part of their legacy. The strike lasts until July 30th. -1934
United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther and his wife May die in a suspicious plane crash as they travel to oversee construction of the Union's education and training facility. Reuther had survived several earlier assassination attempts. -1971

Thursday, May 10:

The UMW (United Mine Workers) calls a selective strike against US coal mines. -1993

A federal bankruptcy judge permits United Airlines to legally abandon all responsibility for worker's pensions, 120,000 employees lose their earned benefits. Executives keep their benefits and get bonuses. -2005

Friday, May 11

Beginning of the Pullman Railroad Strike to protest wage cuts, Chicago, Illinois. The American Railroad Union strikes the Pullman Sleeping Car Co. Eugene Debs soon joins the strike. The largest industrial strike to this date in U.S. history was eventually broken by federal government troops. At least 24 strikers were murdered in order to protect profits. -1894
Puget Sound Grocery Workers (Seattle, Washington) strike. -1989

Saturday, May 12:

Bob Dylan walks out of TV dress rehearsals for "The Ed Sullivan Show." When CBS censors tell Dylan he cannot perform his "Talkin John Birch Society Blues" (satirical song skewering McCarthyism and wacky right-wing paranoia). Dylan refuses to appear on the show. -1963

In an unprecedented show of respect and Solidarity, on the day of Walter and May Reuther's funeral, May 12, UAW International Union members at over 300 plants across the U.S. and Canada turned off their machines and halted assembly lines for 3 minutes to honor their fallen leader. -1970 Butte Montana: Anaconda Company bans I.W.W. Union members from mines. Posted signs read "No member of I.W.W. will be employed at this property." The ban had limited effect and some say it even increased membership in the Union. The IWW has a long history fighting for Montana's working class, including winning the right of Free Speech for all Montanans during Missoula's IWW Free Speech Fights. The Wobblies played a significant role in Butte's labor movement and are part of Butte's "Radical" history that included the Western Federation of Miners. -1920

Sunday, May 13:

Western Federation of Miners formed in Butte, Montana. They organized the hard rock miners of the Rocky Mountain states into a labor Union deemed "radical" by mine owners and investors, who would prefer the miners die in the mines more quietly. Butte Miner's Union becomes "Local Number One". -1893

Brody Mine WV collapsed killing 2. The mine, owned by Patriot Coal was deemed a "pattern violator" and received 253 violations during a 12-month review. The MSHA report says the violations show the mine had a disregard for the health and safety of its miners. -2014

Monday, May 14:

"We Want Beer" marches are held in cities all over America, with 15,000 Unionized workers demonstrating in Detroit. Prohibition is repealed next year. -1932

Milwaukee brewery workers begin 10-week strike, demanding contracts comparable to East and West Coast workers. The strike was won because Blatz Brewery accepts their demands; Blatz was later ousted from the Brewers Association for "unethical" business methods. -1953

Tuesday, May 15:

Supreme Court rules in favor of Samuel Gompers and other Union leaders for supporting a boycott at the Buck Stove and Range Co. in St. Louis, workers were striking for a 9-hour day. A lower court had sentenced the Unionists to prison for refusing to obey an anti-boycott injunction. -1906
Utah Phillips, American labor organizer, folk singer, and storyteller born. He described the struggles of labor Unions, the power of direct action and was a proud member of the IWW. -1935

National Labor Relations Act passed, recognizing workers' right to organize and bargain collectively. -1935
T-Bone Slim, IWW songwriter, died. T-Bone wrote such Wobbly classics as "The Popular Wobbly," and "The Lumberjack's Prayer". T-Bone quote: "Wherever you find injustice, the proper form of politeness is attack." -1942

Alcohol Awareness Month

April was Alcohol Awareness month and very timely as the weather clears and springtime approaches. College and high school graduation celebrating means more youth are heading out for "Campfires" and parties. I think the term we used was "kegs". At any rate underage alcohol use and driving in addition to youth engaging in risky activities can create a deadly combination. The 2017 Youth Risk Behavior Survey (YRBS) reports that 74% of our nation's fatalities in the 15 to 24 age group are related to substance abuse, primarily alcohol. This includes vehicle incidences, accidental death, alcohol poisoning, murders and suicide. Other risky behaviors while under the influence such as unprotected sex with an HIV Infected or STD infected partner or multiple partners are factors in deaths by disease in this age group.

We know that alcohol has detrimental effects on the teenage brain. Each person's experience is unique when it comes to personality however the physical effects in reaction, judgment and physical impairment, balance and overall cognitive decision making are common to all. Some people become aggressive and hostile under the influence of alcohol while some are jovial and carefree. The ability to recognize and control these emotional metamorphoses is also impaired. Arguments can become violent while the availability and use of weapons is becoming more prevalent. The risk of accidental injury from falls, blacking out in dangerous places or succumbing to temperature variations are also serious concerns. The results can be deadly.

With this upcoming season of celebrations and adventure comes Butte Cares annual Sticker Shock Campaign. The current Youth Risk Behavior Survey indicates that most youth are provided alcohol by a trusted adult. This includes parents, older siblings or acquaintances. There are serious civil and criminal consequences for this including prison time. In fact, hosting underage drinking parties at home could cost you your home. The Butte Cares Youth Leadership Team under the direction of Butte Cares STOP Grant (Sober Truth on the prevention of underage drinking) coordinator Jason Cross has been placing stickers on cooler doors in convenience stores and other retail outlets where alcohol is sold throughout Butte/Silver Bow. The stickers reminding; "Don't Buy, Don't Supply" Prevent Underage Drinking! are in partnership with Town Pump, Thriftway, Zip Trip, Walgreens, Three Bears, CVS, and Stokes. The stickers will remain in place throughout the Summer. We are extremely grateful for these collaborations in prevention. Keeping our young people safe is a community effort.

We are all in this together. Butte Cares is working together to build a safe, healthy drug, free community.
