Radar speed signs at Hillcrest spark heated exchanges at council

By Robin Jordan

A proposal to install permanent radar speed signs on Continental Drive near the Hillcrest School got a reprieve from Butte-Silver Bow's council of commissioners last week, but the issue hasn't been settled and a heated discussion arose when some Hillcrest neighbors accused one commissioner of putting dollars ahead of child safety.

Prompted by requests from Hillcrest neighbors, Commissioner Cindy Perdue-Dolan, District 1, proposed to the council several weeks ago that the county install permanent radar speed signs along Continental Drive near the school. The matter was referred to the council's Public Works Committee, which heard the request Sept. 13.

At that meeting, Public Works Director Dave Schultz and road manager Nick Sanford told the committee motorists would eventually ignore the permanent signs, just as they ignore the speed limit signs that are already there. In addition, they said, if one school were to get the signs, which cost between $8,000 and $9,000 apiece, all the other schools would want them. Based on this advice, the committee voted to recommend denying the request and to instead place mobile radar signs on Continental near the school temporarily.

At the full council's meeting Sept. 20, several residents who live near Hillcrest and the school's principal asked commissioners to reject the committee's recommendation and to install permanent signs. They argued that Hillcrest's situation is unique in that students must cross Continental Drive, which is a state highway and the speed limit in the school zone is 25 miles per hour instead of the 15-mile-per-hour limit around other Butte schools. Continental is a semi-truck route, they said, and traffic on the street has increased in recent years with the building of new subdivisions in the area. Pedestrian traffic in the area has also increased at all times of the day with the opening of Skyline Park.

Some who spoke had harsher criticism for commissioners, however, including resident Bob Lienemann, who said Commissioner Sheryl Ralph, a member of the Public Works Committee, had not sought input from the school's neighbors before opposing permanent sign. Another resident, Casey McGruder, who called the permanent signs "a fiscally responsible solution for a potentially lethal problem," accused Ralph and other commissioners of putting the county's budget concerns ahead of child safety.

Ralph said she had talked about the issue with many of her constituents, but she opposed the signs because she doesn't believe they will make a long-term difference. She said the area needs to have a slower speed limit, but she doesn't think the state will be willing to impose one because Continental is a state highway.

Commissioner Dan Foley called suggestions that Ralph and other commissioners don't care about child safety "a flat-out-lie." He said speeding is an issue throughout Butte and the best solution is to have more law enforcement officers on the street writing tickets, not putting up more signs.

Commissioner John Morgan said he has seen a number of "fixes" to the problem of pedestrian safety on Continental Drive near Hillcrest since he went to the school as a boy, from crosswalks to speed limit signs with flashing lights. He said there is a need to educate drivers to slow down, but he doesn't believe the permanent signs will be an effective tool.

"We don't want kids to get the message that these signs will fix the problem," he said. "We still need to educate the kids on crossing the street safely."

Perdue-Dolan made a motion to seek an opinion on the permanent signs from the Montana Department of Transportation and hold the matter in the Public Works Committee. After a substitute motion by Ralph to follow the original committee recommendation to deny the request for signs failed 7-5, commissioners voted 10-2 to approve Perdue-Dolan's motion.

I sent a Facebook friend request to a guy named Tom and woman named Leigh last week, but I am pretty sure they will be ignored.

That is because those two people do not actually exist.

Those were bogus names for actual Facebook accounts made up for the sole purpose of anonymously blasting Butte High coaches. Tom has been hacking on the football coaches, while Leigh really seems to have out for the volleyball coaches.

Together, the trolls named Tom and Leigh have taken cowardice to a Hall of Fame level.

Leigh seemed super mad after Butte High's volleyball team won its first match of the season. The knucklehead coaches somehow managed to win the match while using the wrong players – which is really kind of impressive if you think about it.

BUTTE SPORTS

'Fans' hit a new low with fake Facebook accounts

When it comes to Bulldog football, Tom thinks the only boys getting real playing time are the ones who are the favorite of head coach Arie Grey.

Without delving too deeply into the foolishness of those claims, I simply ask you to think about Tom's accusation for a minute.

Would a coach whose job security depends on the performance of 14- to 18-year-old boys really leave a potential All-State receiver on the bench because that receiver does not put an apple on his desk? Or, in Arie's case, a doughnut?

Of course not. Too many parents, though, would rather see their son or daughter play a lot on a losing team than not play enough on a winner.

While most, if not all, parents who complain about coaches should be banished to Bozeman, most of them at least have the sack to put their name on their comments about the coaches.

That is not the case with Tom and Leigh. Not only do they not put their name on their mean-spirited remarks, they put somebody else's name behind them.

You really have to wonder how a guy like Tom expresses himself on an important issue if he cannot find the courage to attach his name to his outlandish opinion that the high school football coaches could be doing a better job.

You know, those idiots with Tiki Torches in Charlottesville are probably worse people than those who send anonymous notes to coaches. But at least for that one time, those snowflake nosebleeds were brave enough to not hide behind a screen name.

Parents, especially the sneaky, underhanded ones, can bring down a high school sports program a heck of a lot faster than a coach who called for a run when he clearly should have passed.

Those parents can derail a championship team, and they can make a .500 team seem like 2008 Detroit Lions. They leave good coaches in their wake year after year.

About a decade ago, I watched a local basketball team that easily had the talent to bring home a state title derailed by wacko parents.

As the sportswriter who covered the team for the local paper, I was unlucky enough to be thrown in the middle of it, too.

Whenever I wrote a story quoting one player in particular – or pointed out that he led the team in scoring or blocked shots a game – I would get an email praising my greatness as a writer and a reporter.

Sports Illustrated really was missing out by not discovering me in this old mining camp and giving me a spot on its prized back page.

However, when I quoted a certain other player or mention that he led the team in scoring that night, I would get publically undressed on ButteRats.com, the former message board of The Montana Standard, by two anonymous people.

Thanks to the computer whiz at the paper, I knew that both those anonymous people were using the same computer, and one of them was signed in with the same email that was praising me on other nights.

You can only imagine the hell they were putting the coaches and players through if they were willing to schizophrenically target a sportswriter.

The good news is that the husband and wife were truly soul mates. The even better news was that the family moved out of town before their younger children played for our coaches.

ButteRats.com was a coward's paradise before it went away. Searching for an outlet for their rage, these pee-pee pants parents turned to unsigned letters and fake email accounts.

Now, they have reached a new low by turning to the same tactic that the 400-pound man in his basement used to spread fake news on Facebook to – allegedly – influence the 2016 presidential election.

How sad is it that we have cheapened a once-great site where we could share pictures of our kids and exchange political insults with "friends" we have never met before?

Of course, the obvious solution is to just ignore these anonymous fools. If you do not put your name on your opinion, then your opinion just does not matter.

It never does any good to argue with these people because that only empowers them and makes them multiply.

We definitely do not want more of these people because coaches who dedicate so much of their time for other people's children deserve better.

Coaches are there to help the development of young men and women who learn so many valuable lessons – good and bad – while playing high school sports. They are also there to win.

Seriously, there are not many coaches out there who would choose losing with players they like over of winning with players they do not.

So, I reached out to Tom and Leigh, who do not have any "friends" on Facebook. I really hope they accept my requests because I have so many questions for them.

It would be nice to actually have a real conversation with a person who thinks creating a fake Facebook page to publically call out a coach is the right thing to do.

It would be good to see if it is something other than a grossly undersized man part that is making these people tick.

Maybe if we engage in meaningful dialog with such a person we can begin to understand them and look for ways to limit their kind in the future.

Plus, I can always use new people to argue politics with on Facebook.

Wildflower Trail at Lemhi Pass Has a New Look

Looking for a nice easy hiking opportunity?

The Wildflower trail near Lemhi Pass southwest of Dillon received a makeover this summer. The mile and a quarter scenic loop trail was originally built in the 1930's by the Civilian Conservation Corps and had fallen into disrepair with overgrowth of vegetation and numerous trees that had fallen over the trail. Members of the National Smokejumper Association (NSA) Trail Program, and the Camp Fortunate Chapter of the Lewis and Clark Trail Heritage Foundation took on the challenge of coordinating and repairing the trail thanks to a grant from the REI store in Missoula, MT.

Through planning efforts and support from the Dillon Ranger District, the NSA agreed to do the project.

The NSA volunteer crew under the leadership of Bill Kolar along with help from the Lewis and Clark Heritage Foundation, the AmeriCorps St. Louis program and members of the Beaverhead Trail Coalition spent July 23-29 working on the trail.

The REI grant provided trail volunteers with funding to provide food and supplies for the project.

"This was a great project, we reconstructed this trail and it is now in great shape for all to enjoy," said Kolar. "Basically, we work for food and the friendships we form with everyone involved."

"It's volunteer groups like these who make a difference in how we are able to access and enjoy our local trails and National Forests, commented Dillon District Ranger Scot Shuler."

The Lemhi Pass area along the Continental Divide provides exceptional opportunity to see native wildflowers and the natural habitats of forest and meadow. It is the first and possible best opportunity for visitors following the Lewis and Clark Trail to get out of their cars, take a leisurely walk in the woods, and experience the diverse plant life of the Rocky Mountains. The elevation at Lemhi Pass is 7,373 feet above sea level. The trailhead is located at the Sacajawea Memorial Area, where there is a picnic area along the Lewis and Clark National Historic Trail and the Continental Divide National Scenic Trail.

Early snow, cold hamper home improvement project

By Robin Jordan

While cooler temperatures, rain and snow were a boon for Montana firefighters in the last couple of weeks, they have certainly caused a few delays in our home improvement plans.

My husband and I are in the process of doing some work on the front of my Mom's house, as I may have mentioned in an earlier column. When my dad remodeled the house about 50 years ago, he and my mom put Z-Brick on the lower half of the house front. Over the years, the bricks have been peeling away from the house, and the family has had to put sections back on the wall numerous times. After the earthquake last summer, a large section fell off and Dave and I noticed other big sections that were hanging on by a thread, so we decided to replace all of the Z-Brick with another finish.

We had removed all of the brick and chipped all of the remaining mortar/adhesive off the wall in the last few weeks, scraped and sanded the window frames and gotten primer on most of the windows. The next project was to cover the wood with a layer of Tyvek, the white, paper-like moisture barrier you see on houses under construction or repair around town. We had one large section up and were ready to get the rest on the wall when the cold, wet weather hit town.

Of course, the prospect of below freezing temperatures made us put down the tools and hurry back to harvest what we could from the garden. We were able to save several large squashes and a few green tomatoes from the frost. The cold weather doesn't seem to have had much effect on the carrots, so we left them in the ground to pick later. That was about all we had left, but it's always sad to see the end of the garden that we've enjoyed all summer.

The wet weather has persisted, though, which delayed us on finishing the Tyvek until last weekend. While neither of us minds the cooler temperatures and both of us are grateful not to have to breathe the smoke from the forest fires while we work, the rain and snow interfere with some of the things we need to do. We still have some primer and paint work to do, and I know from previous experience that painting in the rain is an exercise in futility.

The thing that has caused us the most grumbling, though, were days that were too damp to work but not nice enough to take a ride out to the country with the dogs.

The dogs were disappointed, too.

However, as I write, the sun is shining and it's a balmy 40 degrees, so we'll probably be back out working today. It's always a gamble to start home improvement projects in late summer in Butte and we knew that when we started. Now that the first freeze is out of the way, let's hope we get a good stretch of the sunny, warm fall days we usually experience here.

The Republicans' Dream Budget

By George Waring

Richard Kogan, Senior Fellow at the Center for Budget and Public Policy, warns us to expect at least five horrors within the proposed federal budget for 2018, the budget being approved in the Republican controlled House of Representatives.

First, regardless of the Senate's failure to repeal Obamacare, the House budget restores the Republican "repeal and replace" bill that passed the House in March. It's that bill that causes 23 million people to lose health care coverage within the decade. Do you recall Rep. Gianforte attacking a reporter who cited that CBO figure of 23 million in a question?

Second, the House budget requires $5.8 trillion in domestic program cuts over the next decade. Half of this comes from programs for low- and moderate-income individuals and families. They are targeted in two ways. First, cuts in Medicaid and other health programs, SNAP (food stamps), and mandatory funding for Pell Grants that help families afford higher education. Second, by annual cuts in appropriations for public education, job training, and housing assistance programs scheduled through 2027.

Third, bear in mind that the Republicans' ultimate goal is to abolish all federally funded domestic programs. At present, their ten-year plan shrinks the cost of programs serving low- and moderate-income people by 36 percent. Kogan notes these cuts "will make it harder for millions of struggling families to afford the basics — a roof over their heads, food on the table, and health care."

The Republicans have reduced domestic spending considerably since their 2010 Tea Party success enabled them to enact the 2011 Budget Control Act, placing annual limits on domestic funding. Today their budget accelerates the rate in reductions. Their goal now is achieving a total reduction of more than $1 trillion by 2027. By then, funding for domestic programs will be reduced by one-third. Domestic programs will be funded at 44% below the level of the last Democratic budget in 2010. Kogan predicts that "federal domestic spending will be reduced to levels during Herbert Hoover's presidency."

In addition to cuts in key programs serving low-income families (e.g. education funding for disadvantaged students, nutrition assistance, housing assistance, and job training), Kogan warns us to expect cuts in "core public services, like law enforcement, Social Security administration, disaster response, and our weather-forecasting infrastructure; and on investments in our economy such as scientific research."

Fourth, the Republicans will use savings from cuts in public programs to finance tax cuts for the wealthy in two ways. First, by restoring the repeal of Obamacare, the House Budget achieves $700 billion in tax cuts through 2027. The Tax Policy Center reports that 45% of the benefit of these tax cuts would go to the wealthiest one percent of households, those making $875,000 or more. Kogan writes that these tax cuts for the wealthy would reduce federal revenues by $1.1 trillion through 2027. Second, the Budget endorses repealing the Alternative Minimum Tax, cutting the corporate tax rate, and setting a special 15% rate for "pass-through" business income that lets lawyers, hedge fund managers, and other elite individuals benefit from receiving a 60% reduction in their federal taxes. These additional tax cuts could cost trillions of dollars through 2027. The House plan assumes Congress will find ways to offset the loss of revenue, but doesn't explain how.

Fifth, House Republicans plan to use the fast-track budget reconciliation process to enact cuts in entitlement programs and taxes. They plan to make $203 billion in cuts in entitlement programs by reconciliation bills that can't be filibustered. They're counting on the cuts passing the Senate with only 51 Republican votes. Kogan writes that this reconciliation process "sets the stage for Robin-Hood-in-reverse legislation, widening income disparities, increasing poverty, and cutting taxes for those at the top and for large, profitable corporations."

The domestic spending favored by Republicans: Homeland Security. It will receive $2 billion more for a nearly 5% annual increase. Republicans are directing their increase specifically to Customs and Border Protection and to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). The latter gets

Tester Announces $8 Million to Strengthen Reading Education in Montana

U.S. Senator Jon Tester last week announced $8 million in federal grant funding for the Montana Office of Public Instruction (OPI) to support reading education across Montana.

The funding comes from the Striving Readers Comprehensive Literary Program and will strengthen pre-literary skills, reading and writing for infants through 12th grade students. OPI will grant out the money to local Montana school districts.

"Every student in Montana deserves a quality public education and these resources will help our local public schools deliver for our students," said Tester, a former teacher. "When students have a strong foundation in reading and writing, they will have success in the future."

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, Tester is a longtime supporter of the Striving Readers Program. He recently voted for legislation that funds the program.

What's Cooking

Fresh Onion Soup

By Debbie Sorensen

Like so many places, the community where I grew up was blessed to have numerous folks who were willing to put their talents to use for a variety of good causes. Two of those individuals had been teachers in the Belt school system for probably a combined total of 65+ years. Their dedication to not only education, but art, music, church, humanity and patriotism was legendary and an inspiration to many.

Alice Klimas and Eva Stober were both daughters of early day settlers in the Belt Valley. They were pressed in to service early in life, to help out in their family kitchens and continued to hone that skill through the years. So much so, that they were elevated to nearly a gourmet status in the area for their culinary accomplishments. The following recipe comes from their "Alice and Eva's Valley Vittles" cookbook, which they compiled as a fund raiser for the Mabel MacDonald Scholarship in Education.

French Onion Soup

3 Qts. Canned beef broth
 ¼ c. canola oil
 ¼ c. flour
 6 slices French bread
 butter

1/3 c. butter
 3 lbs. Yellow onions, thinly sliced salt & pepper to taste
 1 c. Gruyere cheese (grated)
 nutmeg for sprinkling

Melt butter with oil in Dutch oven: stir in onions. Cook, covered over medium heat, stirring occasionally, until onions begin to turn golden. 20-25 minutes. Sprinkle flour over onions. Stir until smooth. Stir in beef broth; simmer covered for 15 minutes. Season.

Heat oven to broil. Spread both sides of bread lightly with butter. Toast on each side. Sprinkle with 2/3 c. of cheese; top each slice with pat of butter and sprinkle with nutmeg. Pour soup into an oven-proof tureen or individual soup bowls (oven-proof). Broil 4" from heat until cheese melts and turns light brown (1 or 2 minutes). Sprinkle with remaining cheese.

Five Tips for Women Business Owners

Women are an integral part of the workforce, but they have had to overcome many obstacles along the way. Of course, challenges still remain, but women's success in the working world is worth commemorating – which will happen on American Business Women's Day Sept. 22. Are you a woman considering "setting up shop" on your own? If so, here are five tips to consider:

Balance your goals. It's possible – perhaps even likely – that your business goals will conflict with your personal financial goals. After all, if you're purchasing new equipment or services for your business, you've got less money – at least for the time being – to put away for your own retirement or your children's education. Hopefully, your investment in your business will pay off in greater income, but, in any case, you will need to balance your personal and professional goals.

Create a retirement plan. As mentioned above, your ability to contribute to a retirement plan may be affected by the amount you put into your business – but that certainly doesn't mean you shouldn't have a retirement plan. In fact, for your future financial security, it's essential that you launch such a plan. Fortunately, small-business owners have a choice of plans, including an "owner-only" 401(k), SEP-IRA and SIMPLE IRA. Although the various plans have different requirements and contribution limits, they all offer tax-deferred earnings, which means your money has the opportunity to grow faster than if it were placed in a vehicle on which you paid taxes every year. (Taxes are due upon withdrawal, and withdrawals prior to age 59 ½ may be subject to a 10% IRS penalty.) Plus, your contributions to a retirement plan may be tax deductible.

Arrange for "backup." Virtually all working women are familiar with the conflict between their careers and their roles as caregivers. Women are still more likely than men to drop out of the workforce for an extended period of time to care for young children or elderly parents. And your caregiving responsibilities won't end just because you are now a business owner. Consequently, you need to have someone you trust available to step in for you when your family obligations call you away from work.

Design a succession plan. When you want to retire, would you like to keep the business in your family? If so, you'll need to create a succession plan that works for you and whomever you'd like to take control. Such a plan can be complex, so you will need to work with your legal and tax advisors – and you'll want to give yourself plenty of time to work out the details.

Build an emergency fund. Maintaining an adequate cash flow will always be a key task – one that involves your sales, billing cycles, inventory and other elements of your business. One way you can help yourself avoid troubles is to maintain an emergency fund consisting of a few months' worth of your business expenses. You'll want to keep this fund in a liquid, low-risk account. Running your own business can be extremely rewarding, but it's never going to be an easy road. However, with perseverance and careful planning, you can smooth out some of the bumps along the way — and give yourself reason to celebrate American Business Women's Day.

evening. If I have treats in the house (and I do it to myself since I love to bake) I can have an appropriate portion and then I can share or freeze the rest so that I am not tempted to eat them all in one day. If I don't particularly feel like exercising, I can change it up or shorten the duration for that day. I can also reassure myself that I will feel much better engaging in activity rather than not and feeling guilty, or even lazy, for giving in.

I didn't grow up in a household of excesses, so wasting food is a strong argument and a hard one to talk back to. I finally decided that the little bit of food that might go to waste would be much more attractive in the bottom of the garbage can than around my middle!

Of course, these are just examples of thoughts you might have. If you are the type that stays on track and doesn't struggle with these mind games, I would guess that you have already learned to manage them. The rest of the process is that if we do have a small lapse and find ourselves indulging too much at dinner, perhaps after a glass of wine that assisted in letting our guard down, the important thing is how we respond to that, or any other lapse.

We then have the choice of beating ourselves up, feeling terrible, and maybe even deciding it is not worth the effort to try to stay on track. Or we can be kind, forgiving and encouraging to ourselves. It is alright to occasionally fall off the plan. It won't be noticed on the scale or in the way we feel if we are back on our healthy-living path by the next meal or the next day.

Be kind to yourself in these situations, but be firm also. By being your own best friend, you can make the arguments that keep you on track and you will reap the benefits by the way you feel and by the way your numbers improve!

Adrenal Health

Are you tired? Like, all the time? Do you drag through your days, getting all the work, chores, and errands done, but wishing you could just sit down and close your eyes? Maybe for a week? Do you dread some added activity, even a fun one, because you are just flat out?

Even without the added pressure of a special event, many Americans live each day pushing themselves to a physical limit, with work, kids' schedules, worry about money, or a myriad of other stressors. If we don't pay attention to the signs of exhaustion, we run the risk of draining our energy and compromising our health. The little glands that help us deal with stress, and need to be cared for, are our adrenals.

These glands, (we have two, and each sits on top of a kidney), are about the size of a grape, and as part of our endocrine system, they secrete potent hormones that are essential to our health and vitality. Affecting the functioning of every tissue, organ and gland and impacting how we think and feel, our adrenals are giant protectors; without them, we would die.

The adrenals help our bodies deal with stress from many sources: injury, perceived threats, (which include good old worry), and disease. They are the champions of the fight-or-flight response, determining our moment-to-moment energy, and keeping our body's reactions to stress in balance. Anti-inflammatory hormones, like cortisol, which is produced in the adrenals, help to minimize allergic reactions, such as swelling and inflammation. Cortisol, at normal levels, converts proteins into energy and releases glycogen, a sugar that our bodies use for stamina. It helps regulate blood pressure, cardiovascular functions, and metabolism. Out of control cortisol production, created when we live with stress that doesn't let up, can gradually tear our body down.

In addition to managing stress, the adrenals are also the source of DHEA, called the mother hormone, and the precursor hormone to estrogen, progesterone and testosterone. If your adrenals are chronically overworked and straining to

Mind Games

It is not my lack of knowledge of healthy eating that results in weight gain. It isn't my ignorance of how much activity I need that results in a day of inactivity. These lapses in my plan for healthier living come from mind games I play on myself.

Do any of these sentences sound like something you say to yourself? I had a really hard day today so I deserve to eat whatever I want for supper tonight. I'm just too darned busy today to fit in any exercise, besides I need a break. If I eat these sweet treats today, they'll be out of the house and I won't be tempted to eat them anymore. And one of my all-time favorites: I'll just eat the rest of this up now so that it doesn't go to waste.

If these types of statements are common in your life, as they are in mine, then we can all work on ways to answer these thoughts to take control of our healthy living. I think it is normal to think this way and what we need is the proper response. Yes, I do have hard days, and what I can do after a particularly difficult one is stick to a well-balanced, nutritional meal that will leave me feeling satisfied and good. I then deserve to relax and kick back and enjoy the rest of the

Zinke's recommendations on national monuments troubling

By Paul Vang

In August I wrote about our former congressman and now Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke. At the time he was positioning himself for the Interior job he promoted himself as modern day Teddy Roosevelt and a protector of our public lands.

It was a dubious claim, and after six months on the job those claims are proving to be what many us feared: a pile of lies.

Recently, the Washington Post obtained a copy of Zinke's secret recommendations to the President on the status of national monuments created in the last 20 years. This is not a document that gives us reason to regard Zinke as a Teddy Roosevelt wannabe.

Zinke's recommendations call for huge reductions in the Bear's Ear National Monument, an area in southeastern Utah that's rich in Native American cultural artifacts. The report recommends reducing the 1.35 million acre monument to just 120,000 acres.

Zinke also recommends reductions in the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument in Utah, Katahdin Woods and Waters

National Monument in Maine, Cascade Siskiyou National Monument in Oregon, Organ Mountains-Desert Peaks and Rio Grande del Norte National Monuments in New Mexico, Gold Butte National Monument in Nevada, and monument areas in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

According to many analysts, Zinke's report is full of lies and misrepresentations. Outside magazine starts off with a quote from the report stating, "There is no doubt that President Trump has the authority to review and consider recommendations to modify or add a monument."

Outside responds, "There is actually a ton of doubt. It's widely accepted that the Antiquities Act grants a President the authority to create monuments but the law doesn't actually contain language authorizing a president to modify an existing monument's borders, let alone abolish it altogether."

Zinke's report suggests that monuments created since 1996 were "made without adequate public consultation." Former Interior Secretary Sally Jewell told High Country News of more than 1,000 meetings with local people and interest groups over a four-year period before Bears Ear was created. The report asserts that road closures in the Rio Grande del Norte Monument in New Mexico have caused ranchers to stop grazing there. New Mexico's senator Martin Heinrich calls that a factual error. He also points out that the report claims that the Organ Mountains-Desert Peak Monument creates problems for Border Patrol enforcement, even though the monument area is five miles away from the Mexican border.

Field & Stream magazine's website reports that both New Mexico's senators, Heinrich and Tom Udall issued a joint statement accusing Zinke of ignoring overwhelming support of New Mexico citizens for the monuments in their state, adding that Zinke declined to attend a town meeting in support of Organ Mountain-Desert Peaks and has never set foot in Rio Grande del Norte.

In a hearing before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Sen. Heinrich questioned John Ruhs, Acting Deputy Director of Operations at the Bureau of Land Management, about false claims about road closures, ranching difficulties, border operations, and protection of hunting and fishing rights.

Ruhs confirmed that BLM staff members were not asked to fact-check Zinke's report. He confirmed that BLM staff did provide data and answered questions but did not participate in drafting the report.

One of the most vocal critics of the monument review process is Land Tawney, executive director of Backcountry Hunters and Anglers. In Field & Stream's report, Tawney says, "If these recommendations reflect the Interior Department's suggested course of action for Congress and President Trump, our public lands, wildlife and outdoor traditions could be at risk. Referring to Zinke's claim to be in the mold of Roosevelt, Tawney asks, "What would Theodore Roosevelt do?"

I give due credit that Zinke's report does recommend National Monument status for the Badger-Two Medicine area, an area tucked in next to Glacier National Park, the Blackfeet Indian Reservation and the Bob Marshall Wilderness.

In any event, it's pretty clear that if the President attempts to drastically reduce National Monuments as recommended there will be a long series of court fights that would likely determine the final outcome.

Carousel Corner

Larry Hoffman

With the arrival of rain, snow, and cold, we've been enjoying a building with heat! Although the two main furnaces have to wait for the completion of sheetrock work, the two unit heaters keep the place above 60 degrees for the tape and "mud" to dry properly.

That work advanced at a faster pace last week, with several people working on it.

Harrington Pepsi let us use their manlift so I could get up to the inside peak of the carousel room to seal leaks in the cupola. Ed Cummings brought it over, which turned into an involved project, and operated it. He left it in the building for a few days so we can make sure the leaks are fixed and then re-install the ventilation fan.

Thanks, Pepsi and Ed!

The mechanism assembly is still at a standstill until the sheetrock work is finished and we have the room for the full diameter of the merry-go-round. It also depends on the successful elimination of the water leaks from the cupola directly above.

We are constantly moving construction materials around as necessary to give the construction folks access to different walls and ceilings with scissor lifts.

There are only a few details to be finished, mostly with getting light fixtures installed in the last ceilings before Pat Petritz can come in and blow in the rest of the insulation, which will greatly reduce the cost of heating and make the warmth more uniform.

Last Saturday was a bust as far as getting a work crew together. All of our key volunteers, including me, had other demands on our time. We try to have construction sessions Mondays and Tuesdays starting at 3:00, as well as Saturdays starting at 9:00, as long as anyone shows up. Things are still stalled out for being able to use inexperienced hands until the sheetrock work is behind us, but hopefully that will be soon. We can use experienced carpenters and electricians to help speed up the work our dedicated core of craftsmen do as they can.

Hang in there with us, Carousel fans, we'll git 'er done!

This Week In Labor History September 27th - October 3rd

"It is essential that there should be organization of Labor. This is an era of organization. Capital organizes and therefore Labor must organize." - President Theodore Roosevelt, Progressive Republican, Progressive Party founder

Wednesday, Sept 27:

Textile workers struck in Fall River, Massachusetts, demanding bread for their starving children. Approximately one in six children between the ages of 10 and 15 were working during the second half of the 19th century, primarily in textile mills, print shops, coal mines and factories for the benefit of the Capitalists. -1875
The U.S. Senate calls for the censure of Senator Joe McCarthy (McCarthyism's name sake). McCarthy took the lead in destroying the lives of many good American's, including actors, musicians and Union members, during his Red Scare, one of the darkest chapters in American history. His name will forever be associated with self-serving right-wing red-baiting. He died the shame of the nation of alcoholism at the age of 48 in 1957. -1954

Thursday, Sept 28:

Federal agents arrested 165 Wobblies (members of IWW) for their public resistance to World War I. Over 300 IWW Union leaders were arrested in September and their offices raided throughout the country. Of course their real crime was fighting for the American workers by continuing to engage in labor strikes and slow-downs, despite the corporate war propaganda. It was the first move in an illegal but successful U.S. government campaign to cripple the American Union movement on behalf of the powerful Capitalists. -1917
Chile: Following years of corporate plunder, the newly elected Socialist government expropriates the Anaconda copper mine. The western Capitalist would later (1973) fund a coup and overthrow the democratically elected president and install a Fascist dictator who murdered hundreds of thousands in order to change Chile into a "Free Market" economy run by U.S. economist Milton Friedman. The corporations were then free to profit, plunder and murder with the full backing of the U.S. Government. -1971

Friday, Sept 29:

The Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) during this month attains the first victory in a strike by steel workers in the Pressed Steel Car Company strike at McKees Rocks, Pennsylvania. -1909
Anaconda Montana: The Anaconda Smelter closes. -1980

Saturday, Sept 30:

The "Industrial Worker" issued its first call for IWW members to join the Missoula, MT Free Speech fight "Come defend the Bill of Rights!". From 1907-1917 the IWW carried out more than 30 Free Speech fights across the US. As police arrested one Wobbly for public speaking (reading aloud the US Constitution), another would take his or her place, resulting in thousands of arrests, as well as mass beatings and torture by vigilantes and police. Their peaceful civil disobedience succeeded in clogging the jails and courts to the point that cities were forced to back down. While jailed the Wobblies would sing nonstop and became known as "the Singing Union". Using these peaceful tactics the IWW won the right of Free Speech for all Montana. -1909
The Lawrence, Massachusetts "Bread and Roses" textile strike was in full swing. 12,000 more textile workers walked out of mills to protest the arrests of strike leaders. Police clubbed striking women and arrested many, the bosses fired 1,500. IWW strike leaders Arturo Giovannitti and Joe Ettor were eventually acquitted. -1912

Sunday, Oct 1:

21 people were killed when the Los Angeles Times building was dynamited during a labor strike. Labor leaders, the McNamara brothers, were kidnapped and taken to the private home of a Chicago police sergeant, where they were brutally tortured. They were later convicted of the bombing based solely on the testimony of a third individual who was also tortured. The brothers plead guilty as a part of a plea bargain, employers and the federal government refused to honor terms of the agreement and the Labor Movement in L.A. collapsed. -1910
Joining the 400,000 coal miners already on strike, 500,000 CIO steel workers strike for safer working conditions, better pay and earned pensions. -1949

Monday, Oct 2:

American Federation of Labor officially endorses campaign for a 6-hour day, 5-day workweek. -1934
Starbucks Workers Union baristas in East Grand Rapids, Mich., organized by the IWW, win their grievances after the National Labor Relations Board cites the company for labor law violations, including threats against Union activists. -2007

Tuesday, Oct 3:

President Theodore Roosevelt met with miners and coal field operators in an attempt to settle the anthracite coal strike, then in its fifth month. It marked the first time a president had personally intervened in a labor-management dispute. Three weeks later, the miners agreed to settle and accept recommendations made by a commission appointed by Roosevelt. -1902
The state militia is called in after 164 high school students in Kincaid, Ill., go on strike when the school board buys coal from the scab Peabody Coal Co. -1932 produce high cortisol levels, they cannot produce enough DHEA for normal health, and hormonal imbalance is the result. (Many women experiencing difficult menopausal or premenstrual symptoms can often attribute them to over-taxed adrenal glands).

Adrenal fatigue results when the glands have over-functioned for too long, and now function below a healthy level. Sufferers can experience debilitating fatigue, sleep disorders, muscle and bone loss, moodiness, depression, skin problems, low libido, weight changes, low blood pressure and blood sugar, food cravings, difficulty concentrating, hair loss, allergies, and autoimmune disorders. Additionally, compromised adrenal function can factor into related conditions including fibromyalgia, hypothyroidism, chronic fatigue syndrome, arthritis, and premature menopause.

Many people with adrenal fatigue may not even say they feel "sick", but they might admit to dragging through their days, and just not feeling "well". They may also feel that they have to use caffeine to get going in the morning, and to stay going throughout the day. Factors that contribute to adrenal exhaustion include poor diet, substance abuse, too little sleep or rest, too much stress, lack of exercise, surgery or chronic illness and repeated infections.

If you think your adrenals aren't functioning adequately, there are blood tests available, but anyone can improve their lifestyles by focusing on more rest and exercise, less stress and avoiding caffeine.

Also, there are natural remedies that may boost the adrenals.

Licorice is a widely used anti-inflammatory and stamina-supporting herb whose active ingredient resembles adrenal hormones. It inhibits an enzyme that normally inactivates cortisol in the kidneys, so cortisol stays in the blood longer and remains active. If you have high blood pressure, or are hypertensive, avoid using licorice as it can raise blood pressure, or find a formula with deglycyrrhized licorice.

The Ayurvedic herb Ashwagandha can feed the adrenals, preventing their exhaustion. Astragalus improves adrenal function and aids in stress reduction, as do kava, passionflower, GABA, and valerian. Many natural supplements for adrenal healthy include these substances, as well as raw adrenal glandular.

Pantothenic acid, (vitamin B5) functions as part of the molecule coenzyme A, which is involved in adrenal cortex function. B5 is necessary for the adrenals to produce cortisol and other adrenal hormones, and has come to be known as the anti-stress vitamin.

Finally, Vitamin C is stored in high amounts in the adrenals, and it is required to produce adrenal hormones in the cortex. When we are under stress, the adrenals mobilize and use vitamin C in order to cope.

If you feel like you're always being dragged behind a buckboard, consult with your naturopathic physician and take care of your adrenal glands naturally.
