Council to consider smoking ban for Clark Park

By Robin Jordan

Butte-Silver Bow commissioners are considering banning smoking in Clark Park due to concerns about public health.

In a presentation to the council last week, Frank Rozan, coordinator of the county's Tobacco Use Prevention Program, said the proposal to make the park smoke-free is strictly driven by public health concerns.

Rozan said that last June, he and about 100 young volunteers picked up litter in the park just after the grass was mowed. He showed commissioners three gallon bags filled with cigarette butts that the group collected.

"This is toxic waste," he said. Rozan explained that cigarette butts take 10-15 years to break down and 80 percent of them wind up in public waterways such as Silver Bow Creek and kill fish and other wildlife. With the amount of money and effort that has been spent on Superfund cleanup of area streams and rivers, he said, it makes sense to try to keep these toxic materials out of the water.

Another concern is youth exposure to cigarette smoke and seeing people smoking in the public park. Clark Park has a kids' splash pad, playground area, picnic pavilions and walking trails that attract a large number of kids and families. Rozan said that studies have shown that exposure to second-hand smoke is just as deadly outdoors as in enclosed spaces, affecting both youth and those with health problems. In addition, he said, when kids see people smoking in public, the message is that it's okay.

"I'm an ex-smoker," he said. "I know what it's like to see people smoking and think it's cool."

Rozan said statistics show that 1,600 people die in Montana every year from smoking-related illnesses. The average age in Montana when kids begin smoking is 11.

Rozan told commissioners that rather than calling for an ordinance to ban smoking in the park, public health officials are asking for non-smoking policy. No-smoking signs would be posted in the park, but the policy would carry no fines. Rozan said public health officials don't expect busy law enforcement officers to be writing tickets for smoking in the park, but that people would self-police if the policy is in place.

"Look at what happened when the indoor smoking ban was passed," he said. "Everybody said bars and casinos would go out of business, but it didn't happen. Today, if I went into a convenience store and lit up a cigarette, two or three clerks would run up and tell me to put it out."

Rozan said two online surveys have shown the majority of the public would support a smoking ban in the park. In one survey, he said, 10 percent of those who favored a ban were smokers themselves.

Rozan said several other cities in Montana have instituted smoking bans in their parks and that if the Clark Park ban is successful, he hopes it will be a pilot for banning smoking in more local parks.

"Look at all the great plans for Stodden Park, with the swimming pool, the carousel, tennis courts, playgrounds and all the other improvements," he said. "Are we going to ruin that with smoking?"

In August, the Parks and Recreation Board voted 4-0 in favor of the ban, but a final decision is up to the Butte-Silver Bow Council of Commissioners, which is expected to vote on the matter soon.

As a puzzled Don Wakamatsu asked the reporter to repeat the question, Paul Panisko, Hempstead and I looked at each other in disbelief.

"What," the reporter said once again to Wak, who was then the manager of the Seattle Mariner, "is the key to a good bunt?"

The Mariners had just won a game in which one of the key runs came home on a squeeze play, which, for the sake of some Mariners fans reading, is a bunt with a runner on third base.

Paul, Blake and I were fully-credentialed reporters for the game because we made the trip to Seattle to cover Butte boy Rob Johnson when he was a catcher for the Mariners.

Wakamatsu looked at the reporter like the boys on The Sandlot looked at Scotty Smalls when he said, "Who is she?" when talking about Babe Ruth.

If the manager had a thought bubble over his head, it would have said something like "Go ask your Little League coach." Or, "You're killing me, Smalls."

The reporter might as well have asked the manager about the color scheme of the Mariners uniform. By the time any player gets to high school, he or she knows the key to a good bunt.

Instead of pointing and laughing at the reporter, Wakamatsu, who is a very polite and friendly man, tried to answer the question as best he could without calling the reporter an L7 weenie.

You have to wonder how Carolina Panthers quarterback Cam Newton would have handled that question.

Cam, you see, thought it was funny to receive a question about the route running of one of his receivers because the question came from a girl.

A female reporter asked the very intelligent football question, and Newton giggled before saying, "It's funny to hear a female talk about routes, like ... it's funny."

Jourdan Rodgrue of the Charlotte Observer was the reporter asking, and by her question you can tell she has a solid understanding of the sport.

She did not ask, "What's the secret to a good handoff?" Or, "Why did you chose to wear the No. 1?" She asked a solid question about football.

You have to wonder what Cam found so funny about hearing a question from a female. Was he surprised she wasn't asking if he wanted another cup of coffee?

Judging by Cam's seemingly sincere apology, I don't think this was entirely about the quarterback acting like Dabney Coleman on the movie "9 to 5."

"You're a sexist, egotistical, lying, hypocritical bigot."

Instead, it seemed like Cam just has a hard time fielding such a question from someone he does not see as a football equal. The question was coming from somebody who never played the sport at a high level, something that was made clear by the soft voice.

But if Cam really isn't a male chauvinist, and let's give him that benefit of the doubt, then he should be laughing at just about every question at his post-game press conferences. Well, at the pressers when he is not crying like a little girl, that is.

It isn't just the girls who are covering sports that they never played at a high level. It's hard to believe, Cam, but those boys who tend to ask some extremely stupid questions didn't play, either.

That does not, however, mean that they cannot report on the game.

Howard Cosell, a television announcer we should all have a new respect for now that we're stuck with Joe Buck, titled his memoir, "I Never Played the Game."

The press box at every football game is filled with reporters – men and women – who never played the game they are covering above the youth level. That's because, relatively speaking, very few people play any sport at a high level.

According to scholarshipstats.com, a high school football player has a 2.5 percent chance of playing for an NCAA Division I school. Prep baseball players only have a 2.1 percent chance of a DI roster spot, while high school basketball players have a 0.9 percent chance.

Even Lloyd Christmas doesn't like those odds.

The media members who did play the game usually do not attend the press conferences, either. They are usually working as the color commentator and saying something that makes us quickly search from our mute button.

This isn't like John McEnroe being asked if Serena Williams can compete with men. Women can clearly write and report just as well as the best men in the business. They have, and they do.

When it comes to color commentators and studio analysts, fans definitely like to hear from people who played the game, and right now, in my opinion, there isn't anyone doing it better than former softball All-American Jessica Mendoza for ESPN.

Mendoza never played Major League Baseball, but she understands the game, and more importantly, knows how to convey that understanding to the viewers – at least to the viewers who aren't sexist pigs.

Would Cam laugh at her for asking a question about the batting approach of Aaron Judge?

Would he laugh at Peter King, the long-time respected NFL reporter, for asking the same question Rodrigue asked?

Judging by their physiques, Rodrigue would run a much better route than King ever could.

When it comes to sportswriters, writing ability and knowledge of the sport is much more important than the writer's 40 time.

Call me crazy, but I like to read sportswriters who actually went to journalism school and know that a pronoun is not a noun that lost its amateur status. (That is a Calvin and Hobbes reference, by the way.)

More than anything else, that is the mistake Cam made, and he is getting beat up pretty good for his insanely stupid reaction to the question. He lost his endorsement deal with Dannon, the pro-woman yogurt.

What might be just as bad as Cam's response was that the press conference room was mostly full of men who sat silent as the quarterback disrespected one of their colleagues.

Not one of those "men" had the courage to ask Cam a follow-up question like, "What in the blue hell is that supposed to mean, Cam?" That is the question we all would have liked to have heard.

Instead, they sat there, dumfounded, like Paul, Blake and I did in Seattle.

Dogs enjoy a snow day

By Robin Jordan

While our recent spates of cold weather, wind and snow have been frustrating in our efforts to do some home improvement at my mother's house, they have given us a good excuse to load the dogs in the family van and go out in the woods.

The dogs, Bucky and Cori, live with Mom and they've been thrilled to have us spending most of our daylight hours at her house while we work on refurbishing the front wall. However, they find it frustrating that we're working out front most of the time while they are confined to the back yard. Of course, we make frequent trips around to the back to get a ladder or look for tools, but for the most part, they only get to spend time with us when we're finished with work for the day.

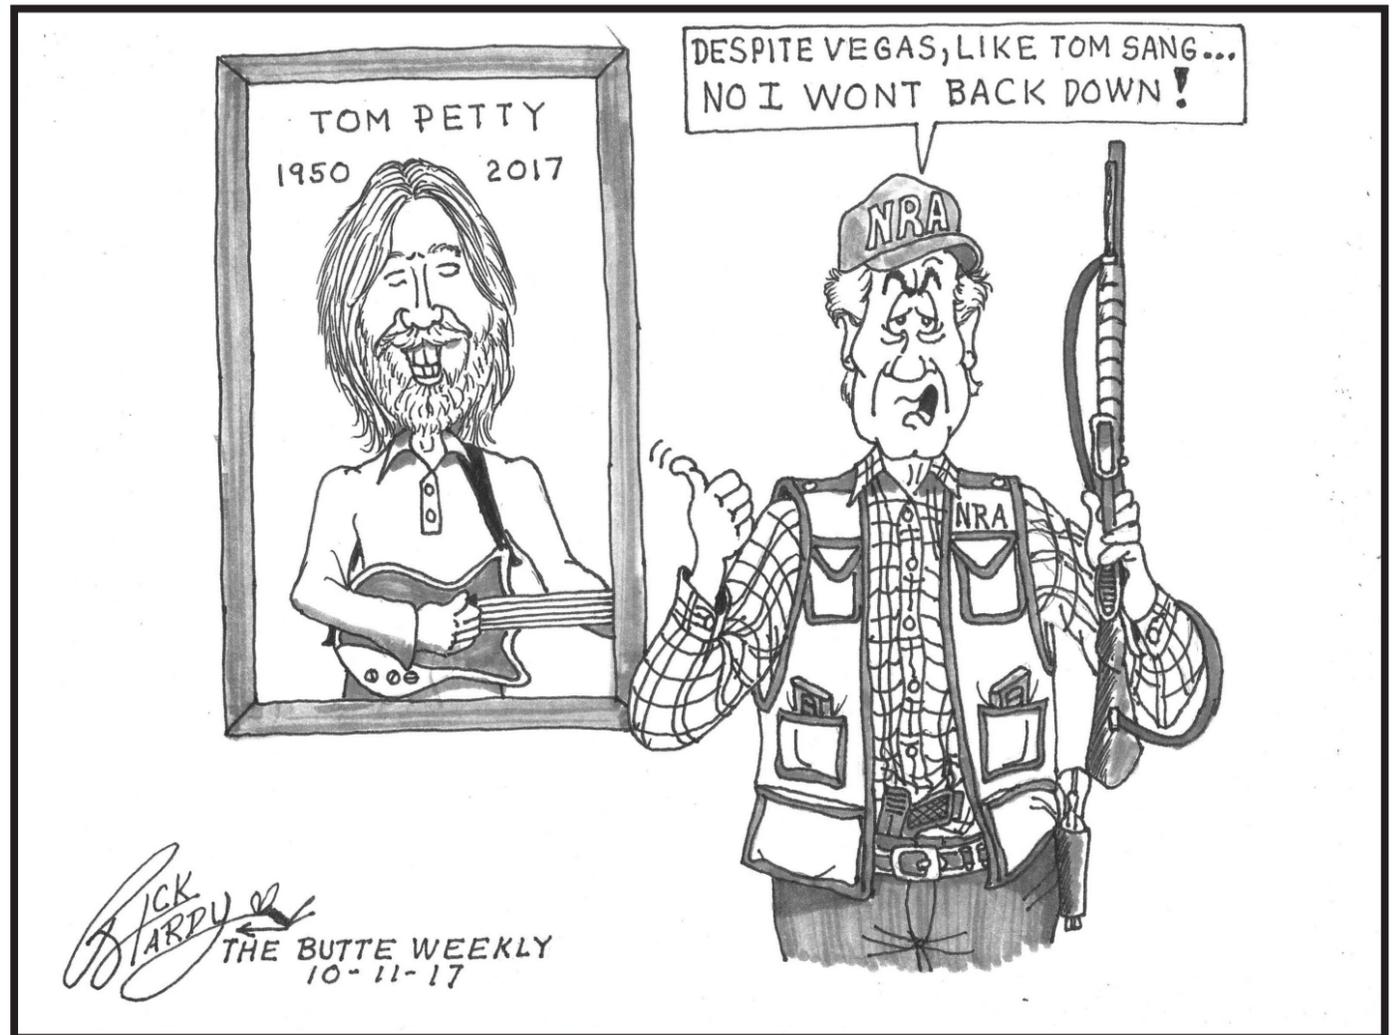

So, when a recent cold snap with snow halted our work temporarily, we took a snow day with the dogs.

The dogs are always crazy to go somewhere in the van because they know they will get an exciting ride out of town, during which they can bark wildly at innocuous pedestrians and dogs on the street or in vehicles. Then, it's off to the country, where they might see cows along the road or even a deer or two. If the scenery doesn't do much for the dogs, my husband Dave and I enjoy seeing the amazing colors of the leaves as they change in the fall.

On our recent trip, we picked a familiar spot with a little creek where the dogs love to splash and play in the warmer months. This day, however, was crisp and cold and there were two or three inches of snow on the ground, so even Bucky, our big Husky/German Shepherd, avoided the creek, preferring instead to meander through the white stuff, scooping it up in his mouth as if it were a giant snow-cone. Cori, the Boston Terrier, outfitted in her bright pink sweater, preferred to grab her Frisbee from the back of the car, insisting we play a game.

Cori seems to think fetching the Frisbee is her main mission in life. Once she gets us to agree to take it along, she doesn't want to do anything but chase it. To our frustration, she ignores all the interesting trees, bushes and tiny burrows along the trail in favor of focusing solely on her toy. The snow doesn't faze her. She bounds through the deepest drifts to retrieve the Frisbee, which on this day was picking up big clots of wet snow with every toss. Each time, we'd knock the snow out of the Frisbee and throw it again, only to have her haul it back, full of a new scoop.

We walked to a nearby field where there is lots of room for Cori to stretch her legs and retrieve and Bucky can explore the willows and creek bank. He always finds lots of scents here that keep him busy. On this day, Dave spotted him nosing a certain area busily and saw some small tracks, possibly those of a small fox. We followed the tracks for a short way, admiring the neat path through the willows the animal had made the night before, possibly while on a hunt.

Of course, Cori grew bored quickly with the meandering route and started barking furiously for more Frisbee time. We obliged for a time, sailing the snow-logged Frisbee as far as we could throw it so that Cori could bound through the snowy sagebrush to retrieve it.

On the walk back to the car, however, Bucky decided to get into the game and chase Cori with a great show of big-dog foolishness. She reacted with her Boston Terrier ferocity, leaping and snapping at his big jaws, which he thinks is great fun. After a few of these playful skirmishes, Cori apparently decided she had had enough, picking up her Frisbee and trotting far ahead of us back to the car. That's the first time she's done that—maybe she was finally feeling the cold, or maybe she's just getting old enough to say, "That's it! I've had all of this that I can handle."

Back at the car, the dogs had to have treats and I had to wrap Cori in a warm blanket for the ride home. Soon, both the dogs were sleeping peacefully, Bucky stretched out on the back seat of the van and Cori in my lap.

Hopefully, we'll see more dry, warm weather before winter sets in for good, but we all enjoyed the break and a chance to get out for a snow day.

Mnuchin's Alternative Facts

By George Waring

Treasury Secretary Stephen Mnuchin has been trying to convince Trump's base that their president's proposed tax reform actually benefits working people. In his effort, Mnuchin has relied on just one study, a study created by Trump's chief economist. Mnuchin has ignored all the other scholarly studies honest economists are using to understand the corporate income tax's societal effects.

Mnuchin has adopted the required Trump White House role of fact-ignoring propagandist, or "alternative fact" spouter, in order to defend the very heart of Trump's tax reform: the proposed reduction in the federal corporate income tax rate from 35% to 15%.

Mnuchin has been repeating the falsehood that the Trump Administration's "objective" or purpose in so drastically cutting corporate taxes is to increase workers' wages. He must sell this fable because the middle-class tax cuts his boss promised on the campaign trail can't be found in Trump's tax reform.

This is the fall-back position for the Administration: Trump has something far better than reduced taxes for workers. This is greatly increased wages. According to Mnuchin's stock presentation, the increase in workers' wages resulting from a reduction in the corporate income tax from 35% to 15% will far exceed any income resulting from a reduction in middle income taxes.

To make his case, Mnuchin must convince white workers that the current rate of 35% on corporate income is the major reason their wages have been stagnant or weakening. Therefore, Mnuchin inserts into his tax reform presentations the following: "many, many economic studies show that more than 70 percent of the burden of corporate taxes are passed on to the workers."

Where does Mnuchin get his information? Tax analysts at the Center for Budget and Public Policy, Chye-Ching Huang and Brandon Debot report that Mnuchin relies on one study prepared by Kevin Hassett, the Chair of Trump's Council of Economic Advisers, and his colleague, Aparna Mathur, an American Enterprise Institute scholar.

Huang and Debot report that the overwhelming consensus among tax policy researchers "indicates that most of the benefits from a reduction in the corporate income tax rate cut go to the wealthiest group." Only a small share of benefits trickle down to low- and moderate-income working families." Even that Wall Street Journal favorite, The Tax Policy Center, "estimates about 70% of the benefit of a corporate rate cut will flow to the top fifth of households, with one-third flowing to the top 1 percent alone."

According to Huang and Debot, Congress's official non-partisan scorekeepers, the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Committee on Taxation, plus Mnuchin's own Treasury Department's Office of Tax Analysis are in agreement concerning the real winners from a cut in the corporate income tax rate: "Only about a quarter or less of corporate taxes fall on workers, meaning that they would receive a quarter or less of the benefit of corporate tax cuts." Their estimates are far below the "more than 70 percent of the burden of corporate taxes being passed on to the workers," as Mnuchin claims.

The Center's researchers tell

What's Cooking

Chocolate Zucchini Cake

By Debbie Sorensen

It seems that an end to this years' gardening can be declared. The cooler weather and seasonal precipitate have taken care of those last few items that were hanging on. I declared an end to our garden several weeks ago, sadly lamenting the fact that our zucchini seeds never poked one tentative leaf up through the decomposed granite we're dealing with.

Zucchini is usually right up there with rhubarb in making me feel good in the garden department. Not this year! Wah-wah-wah. Chock it up to old seed. Make that very old seed, I guess. So, into the garbage with any left-over seeds. I'll be ready with renewed enthusiasm next summer.

I finally broke down and bought some nice sized zucchini for baking at the Farmers Market last week-end. It didn't take long to put together a moist and delicious Chocolate Zucchini Cake. I combined recipes from Bonnie Smolik and Sue McKie in the "Whitehall Community Cookbook."

Chocolate Zucchini Cake

½ c. butter softened	½ vegetable oil
1 ¾ c. sugar	2 eggs
1 tsp vanilla extract	2 ½ c. all-purpose flour
¼ c. baking cocoa	1 tsp baking soda
½ tsp baking powder	½ tsp cinnamon
¼ - ½ tsp cloves	½ c. sour milk*
2 c. shredded, peeled zucchini	½ c semisweet chocolate chips

In mixing bowl, cream butter, oil and sugar. Beat in eggs and vanilla. Combine dry ingredients; add to the creamed mixture alternately with milk. Mix well. Stir in zucchini. Pour into a greased and floured 13"x9"x2" baking pan. Sprinkle with nuts and chocolate chips. Bake at 350° for 40-45 minutes or until a toothpick inserted near the center comes out clean. Cool on a wire rack. Yield: 12-15 servings. Freezes well. (*Note: To sour milk, place 1 ½ tsp vinegar in a measuring cup. Add milk to equal ½ c.) For a fancy touch when serving, add a dollop of whipped cream to cake pieces and drizzle 1 tsp chocolate syrup over the top

Consider Multiple Factors When Creating Retirement Plans

When you create your financial and investment strategies for retirement, what will you need to know? In other words, what factors should you consider, and how will these factors affect your investment-related decisions, before and during your retirement?

Consider the following:

Age at retirement – Not surprisingly, your retirement date likely will be heavily influenced by your financial situation – so, if you have to keep working, that's what you'll do. But if you have a choice in the matter, your decision could have a big impact on your investment strategy. For example, if you want to retire early, you may need to save and invest more aggressively than you would if you plan to work well past typical retirement age. Also, your retirement date may well affect when you start accepting Social Security payments; if you retire early, you might have to start taking your benefits at age 62, even though your monthly checks will be considerably smaller than if you waited until your "full" retirement age, which is likely to be 66 or 67.

Retirement lifestyle – Some people want to spend their retirement years traveling from Athens to Zanzibar, while others simply want to stay close to home and family, pursuing quiet, inexpensive hobbies. Clearly, the lifestyle you choose will affect how much you need to accumulate before you retire and how much you will need to withdraw from your various investment accounts once you do.

Second career – Some people retire from one career only to begin another. If you think you'd like to have a "second act" in your working life, you might need some additional training, or you might just put your existing expertise to work as a consultant. If you do launch a new career, it could clearly affect your financial picture. For one thing, if you add a new source of earned income, you might be able to withdraw less from your retirement accounts each year. (Keep in mind, though, that once you reach 70 ½, you will have to take at least some withdrawals from your traditional IRA and your 401(k) or other employer-sponsored retirement plan.) On the other hand, if you keep earning income, you can continue putting money into a traditional IRA (until you're 70 ½) or a Roth IRA (indefi-nately) and possibly contribute to a retirement plan for the self-employed, such as a SEP-IRA or an "owner-only" 401(k).

Philanthropy – During your working years, you may have consistently donated money to charitable organizations. And once you retire, you may want to do even more. For one thing, of course, you can volunteer more of your time. But you also might want to set up some more permanent method of financial support. Consequently, you might want to work with your legal advisor and financial professional to incorporate elements of your investment portfolio into your estate plans to provide more support for charitable groups.

As you can see, your retirement goals can affect your investment strategy – and vice versa. So, think carefully about what you want to accomplish, plan ahead and get the help you need. It takes time and effort to achieve a successful retirement, but it's worth it.

Tracking Activity

We've talked about the importance of aerobic or cardio-vascular exercise as well as the importance of getting steps and activity during the day. Today we will discuss putting it all together using a variety of tools that we have available to us in the modern era of electronics. We will also include tools for those who are more comfortable utilizing paper and pen.

Before we talk about tools, you may be wondering why tracking is important, or even useful. There have been studies that have shown that most of us make two mistakes. We overestimate the amount of activity we get and underestimate the number of calories we take in. Since we have already talked about food tracking, activity is our focus today.

Let's begin with the writing tools that are universally available. At office-supply stores and on-line there are some really nice diaries that include places to write down everything you eat and drink and the type of exercise, including the number of minutes. You can also include minutes of other activities like gardening, vacuuming, mopping and others that take enough time to track. Writing this down on any tablet or pad you already have also works. Tracking consistently makes it easy to look back on the week and see if you are getting enough of all types of activity.

Pedometers have typically been affordable and many of you may already use one, or have one that is waiting to be put to use. 10,000 steps per day is a good guideline, but if you aren't very active now, the pedometer can be used daily for a week without increasing activity to get an average of the number of steps you currently take. From there, see if you can increase by 500 steps per day each week until you get a more active, but still manageable number.

Next, remember that steps alone do not measure the intensity of the activity. It is important to track the minutes that you are in a class, walking, biking or participating in other exercise. The minimum recommendation for cardio exercise is 30 minutes on most, if not all days of the week. Work towards this goal gradually, and when there, you can consider adding more minutes and/or intensity to your routine.

Activity trackers let you know the number of steps you've gotten throughout the day, remind you when it is time to "stroll", how you sleep and how much of your exercise is cardio, fat burn, and more. All of the totals and averaged for you and you get a weekly report on how you are doing. Exercise is included in steps but you can see how many steps were in addition to exercise session(s). If you are contemplating a purchase, a basic tracker may be a good place to start.

Regardless of which tool you wish to utilize and whether you are electronically inclined or not, tracking your activity is motivational and provides you with a realistic record of how you are progressing. With the challenges of inclement weather arriving early this year, it is a useful way to stay 'on track'!

Adrenal Health

Are you tired? Like, all the time? Do you drag through your days, getting all the work, chores, and errands done, but wishing you could just sit down and close your eyes? Maybe for a week? Do you dread some added activity, even a fun one, because you are just flat out?

Even without the added pressure of a special event, many Americans live each day pushing themselves to a physical limit, with work, kids' schedules, worry about money, or a myriad of other stressors. If we don't pay attention to the signs of exhaustion, we run the risk of draining our energy and compromising our health. The little glands that help us deal with stress, and need to be cared for, are our adrenals.

These glands, (we have two, and each sits on top of a kidney), are about the size of a grape, and as part of our endocrine system, they secrete potent hormones that are essential to our health and vitality. Affecting the functioning of every tissue, organ and gland and impacting how we think and feel, our adrenals are giant protectors; without them, we would die.

The adrenals help our bodies deal with stress from many sources: injury, perceived threats, (which include good old worry), and disease. They are the champions of the fight-or-flight response, determining our moment-to-moment energy, and keeping our body's reactions to stress in balance.

Anti-inflammatory hormones, like cortisol, which is produced in the adrenals, help to minimize allergic reactions, such as swelling and inflammation. Cortisol, at normal levels, converts proteins into energy and releases glycogen, a sugar that our bodies use for stamina. It helps regulate blood pressure, cardiovascular functions, and metabolism. Out of control cortisol production, created when we live with stress that doesn't let up, can gradually tear our body down.

In addition to managing stress, the adrenals are also the source of DHEA, called the mother hormone, and the precursor hormone to estrogen, progesterone and testosterone. If your adrenals are chronically overworked and straining to produce high cortisol levels, they cannot produce enough DHEA for normal health, and hormonal imbalance is the result. (Many women experiencing difficult menopausal or premenstrual symptoms can often attribute them to over-taxed adrenal glands).

Adrenal fatigue results when the glands have over-functioned for too long, and now function below a healthy level. Sufferers can experience debilitating fatigue, sleep disorders, muscle and bone loss, moodiness, depression, skin problems, low libido, weight changes, low blood pressure and blood sugar, food cravings, difficulty concentrating, hair loss, allergies, and autoimmune disorders. Additionally, compromised adrenal function can factor into related conditions including fibromyalgia, hypothyroidism, chronic fatigue syndrome, arthritis, and premature menopause.

Many people with adrenal fatigue may not even say they feel "sick", but they might admit to dragging through their days, and just not feeling "well". They may also feel that they have to use caffeine to get going in the morning, and to stay going throughout the day. Factors that contribute to adrenal exhaustion include poor diet, substance abuse, too little sleep or rest, too much stress, lack of exercise, surgery or chronic illness and repeated infections.

If you think your adrenals aren't functioning adequately, there are blood tests available, but anyone

Las Vegas tragedy beyond political satire

By Paul Vang

I miss Tom Lehrer.

Okay, Tom Lehrer is still alive and well. He's nearing age 90, enjoying good health and retirement in Santa Cruz, California.

For those too young to have known and loved Tom Lehrer, Lehrer was the Harvard mathematics lecturer who had a brief, blazing career as a writer of satirical songs, such as "Poisoning Pigeons in the Park," the "Vatican Rag," "The Elements," and "So Long (I'm off to drop the bomb)."

Lehrer quit show business at the peak of his career. An apocryphal story, which Lehrer later denied, was that when Henry Kissinger won the Nobel Peace Prize, Lehrer was purported to have commented, "Political satire is now obsolete." I would guess that we Lehrer fans would say, "If he didn't say it, he should have."

If Lehrer were to return to the satirical song racket he'd have an abundance of things to sing about. We might say that it's a "target-rich environment."

Alas, last week that target-rich environment began with another target-rich environment, an audience of 22,000 people attending a big outdoor country music show in Las Vegas. A lone gunman, Stephen Paddock, with no known reason for doing so, managed to take some 24 firearms into his Las Vegas hotel room and when country music star Jason Aldean, started his act, Paddock broke his hotel windows and started spraying bullets on the crowd.

Paddock committed suicide before law enforcement officers were able to arrest him. Among the firearms found in his room were many semiautomatic rifles that had been converted to fully-automatic.

The purchase of fully automatic firearms is tightly regulated, however it is relatively easy—and legal—to go on the internet and purchase devices that convert semiautomatic AR rifles to virtual machine guns.

Two days after the event, the death toll was up to 59, though additional deaths were expected, and over 400 people were hospitalized. It's rated as the worst mass-shooting ever.

And what would a modern version of Tom Lehrer sing about? We might start with televangelist Pat Robertson, who regularly comes up with statements ripe for satirical comment, who blamed the mass shooting on disrespect for authority, "There is profound disrespect of our president...All the way up and down the line: disrespect." Senator John Thune (R-SD) said victims should have been more careful. "As someone said—get small."

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders told the press that it wasn't appropriate to talk about policy so soon after the tragedy. "There will certainly be a time for that policy discussion to take place, but that's not the place we're in at this moment."

Even President Trump's statement regarding the tragedy was a target of criticism. David Frum, a speechwriter for President George W. Bush, said Trump's comments were "steeped in hypocrisy." He added, "He is the least outwardly religious president of modern times, the president least steeped in scripture. For him to offer the consolations of God and of faith after mass bloodletting is to invite derision." For days after the shooting, the National Rifle Association maintained a code of silence, with no public statements or tweets, and even delaying, for one week, a series of political ads for Virginia's gubernatorial election. Observers, however, were expecting that the NRA would likely come out with statements similar to what they said after the Sandy Hook tragedy.

Republican leaders in the House of Representatives did, however, elect to delay action on a bill that would loosen restrictions on purchasing gun silencers. Aside from that, individual members primarily offered "thoughts and prayers."

ABC late night host Jimmy Kimmel commented on politicians offering thoughts and prayers, "They should be praying. They should be praying for God to forgive them for letting the gun lobby run this country, because it's so crazy."

Maybe, on second thought, it's just as well that Tom Lehrer isn't writing new satirical songs about these events. A government that simply lets one tragedy after another happen with total inaction is too far-gone for mere satire. It's time for We the People to send a message.

Carousel Corner

Larry Hoffman

Last week the progress on our Carousel shifted into a much higher gear with the hiring of (Mike) Sawicki Builders and Mason Masters' All American Construction to work with other contractors and volunteers to get the walls, and especially the ceiling, done.

Mudding and taping the sheetrock means the building interior must be kept at sixty degrees for proper curing. Without the ceilings being airtight and insulated, a lot of that heat just goes up and out. The blow-in insulation has been delivered and Pat Petritz is ready to blow it in place as soon as the last boards are in place and the electricians have installed and wired the light fixtures.

Sonya Rosenthal and Michele Brennick worked on the Giving Tree that fills one of the walls in the west wing, filling in over the bas relief structure created over the last few weeks.

We had a pretty good crew out on Saturday morning, with 3 electricians, a carpenter, and an old mining engineer.

The top of our entrance façade, above the "CAROUSEL" letters Tillo Enterprises made for us, has been open to the weather between the front and back, waiting for a cap that has been delayed again and again. I put a temporary plastic cover on it that will keep the moisture out until a permanent one can be built. With me working on the roof and a lot of people in the park for softball, it was a guarantee the wind would be howling

This week should see the last of the sheetrock in place and most of the taping finished, with the walls ready for texturing. A "slap-on" texture has been selected that is a great volunteer project for next Saturday's work session, starting at 9:00 AM. Even kids can work on texturing the walls with random swatches of plaster applied with brushes, putty knives, and paint brushes under the direction of one of our experts.

Wear old clothes and be prepared to be splattered and white (and have some fun) by the time the session is over.

Also this week we hope to get up to the cupola below the weather vane and track down the leaks that have been plaguing us. The last two tries have greatly reduced, but not stopped, it.

Work sessions Mondays and Tuesdays at 3:00, Saturdays at 9:00, or call me at 491-4660 if you are available other times.

Contributions may be made by PayPal from our Facebook page, www.facebook.com/pages/Spirit-of-Columbia-Gardens-Carousel, or the website, <http://www.buttecarousel.com/>, by mail to P.O. If you have any comments or suggestions, or would like to volunteer to help, please let us know! Call the office at 494-7775, or stop by the site. We are not there all the time, but as much as we can!

This Week In Labor History October 11th - October 17th

"It is difficult to get a man to understand something, when his salary depends on his not understanding it."

-Upton Sinclair, Iconic American Author, Journalist, Social Justice Activist, Pulitzer Prize winner

Wednesday, Oct 11:

The Miners' National Association was founded in Youngstown, Ohio, with the goal of uniting all miners, regardless of skill or ethnicity, echoing the Knights of Labor and presaging the IWW. -1873

1,500 plantation workers strike Olaa Sugar, on Hawaii's Big Island. They struck for better pay, safer working conditions and better hours. -1948

Thursday, Oct 12:

Also known as "Miners Day," October 12 commemorates the 14 miners who were murdered in the "Virden Riot", when miners were shot by mine guards attempting to bring in strike-breakers. The Strike was in response to mine owners' refusal to accept the 8-hour day, offer raises, abolish the company store and recognize the United Mine Workers Union. -1898
14 striking miners murdered, 22 wounded by "scab herders" who were protecting company profits in Pana, Illinois. The miners were striking for safer working conditions and better pay. -1902

Friday, Oct 13:

The AFL votes to boycott all German-made products as a protest against Nazi antagonism to organized labor within Germany. On May 2nd, 1933 Hitler declared all Unions illegal and ordered police to occupy all Union headquarters and arrest every Union official and leader, many never to be seen again. Fascists have historically been anti-Union because Unions give the people power and promote Democracy. -1934

More than 1,100 office workers strike Columbia University in New York City. The mostly female and minority workers win Union recognition and pay increases. -1985

Saturday, Oct 14:

New York City cigar makers strike against pay cuts and restrictive factory rules this fall. Despite community support, the strike is lost in January. As a leader of the strike, future co-founder of the AFL, Samuel Gompers is blacklisted and unable to find work for four months, a strain on his family which included four children with one on the way. -1877

2-day founding congress of the International Working People's Association, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Marks the beginning of the "radical" trade Union movement in the US. -1883

Sunday, Oct 15:

President Woodrow Wilson signs the Clayton Antitrust Act, often referred to as "Labor's Magna Carta", establishing that Unions are not "conspiracies" under the law. It for the first time freed Unions to strike, picket and boycott bad employers. In the years that followed numerous state anti-worker measures and negative court interpretations weakened the law. -1914

Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) Free Speech fight in Fresno, California. During the free speech fights the I.W.W. called members from across the country to "defend the Bill of Rights". Members were arrested for reading the US constitution in public until the jails were full. The Wobblies sang nonstop in jail. When they refused to stop, jailers turned fire hoses on the prisoners but they kept singing. These non-violent battles waged by the workers breathed life into the First Amendment, and forced political elites onto the defensive by winning the right of Free Speech for all Americans. -1915

Monday, Oct 16:

Abolitionist John Brown leads 18 men, including five free blacks, in an attack on the Harper's Ferry ammunition depot, the beginning of guerrilla warfare against slavery. -1859
Millions struck on International McStrike Day for fair wages. World wide fast food worker's strike that targeted the largest chains, including Yum! Brand Inc.'s Taco Bell, KFC, Subway and Burger King Worldwide Inc., "What the workers are trying to do is hold the corporations accountable," Mary Kay Henry, SEIU. -2002

Tuesday, Oct 17:

Albert Einstein arrives in the U.S.A. as a war refugee. The theoretical physicist co-founded AFT Local 552. Einstein said "I consider it important, indeed urgently necessary, for workers to get together, both to protect their own economic status and...to secure their influence in the political field." -1933

"Salt of the Earth" strike begins in Silver City, New Mexico. On this date Local 890 chapter of the International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers decided to strike, demanding an end to discriminatory working conditions and the dual wage system of two-tiered pay, different for Mexican American workers as compared to white workers. Strikers' wives "man" and walk picket lines for 7 months during 14-month strike. -1950 can improve their lifestyles by focusing on more rest and exercise, less stress and avoiding caffeine. Also, there are natural remedies that may boost the adrenals.

Licorice is a widely used anti-inflammatory and stamina-supporting herb whose active ingredient resembles adrenal hormones. It inhibits an enzyme that normally inactivates cortisol in the kidneys, so cortisol stays in the blood longer and remains active. If you have high blood pressure, or are hypertensive, avoid using licorice as it can raise blood pressure, or find a formula with deglycyrrhized licorice.

The Ayurvedic herb Ashwagandha can feed the adrenals, preventing their exhaustion. Astragalus improves adrenal function and aids in stress reduction, as do kava, passionflower, GABA, and valerian. Many natural supplements for adrenal healthy include these substances, as well as raw adrenal glandular.

Pantothenic acid, (vitamin B5) functions as part of the molecule coenzyme A, which is involved in adrenal cortex function. B5 is necessary for the adrenals to produce cortisol and other adrenal hormones, and has come to be known as the anti-stress vitamin.

Finally, Vitamin C is stored in high amounts in the adrenals, and it is required to produce adrenal hormones in the cortex. When we are under stress, the adrenals mobilize and use vitamin C in order to cope.

If you feel like you're always being dragged behind a buckboard, consult with your naturopathic physician and take care of your adrenal glands naturally.

PRAYER TO THE HOLY SPIRIT

Holy Spirit: You who makes me see everything and shows me the way to reach my ideal. You who gives me the divine gift to forgive and forget the wrong that is done to me. And You who are in all the instances of my life with me, I, in this short dialogue, want to thank you for everything and confirm once more that I never want to be separated from You no matter how great the material desires may be. I want to be with You and my loved ones in Your perpetual glory. Amen. Thank You for Your Love towards me and my loved ones.

Person must pray this 3 consecutive days without asking you request. After the third day your wish will be granted no matter how difficult it may be. Then, promise to publish this dialogue as soon as your favor has been granted.
